

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2007 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

<http://www.archive.org/details/playsshakes14shakuoft>

The Pitt Press Shakespeare for Schools

TWELFTH NIGHT;

OR,

WHAT YOU WILL

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS
C. F. CLAY, MANAGER
LONDON : FETTER LANE, E.C. 4

NEW YORK : THE MACMILLAN CO.
BOMBAY
CALCUTTA }
MADRAS } MACMILLAN AND CO., LTD.
TORONTO : THE MACMILLAN CO. OF CANADA, LTD.
TOKYO : MARUZEN-KABUSHIKI-KAISHA

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

SHAKESPEARE

TWELFTH NIGHT; OR,
WHAT YOU WILL

• EDITED BY
A. W. VERITY, M.A.
SOMETIME SCHOLAR OF TRINITY COLLEGE

[14]

203888
17. b. 26

CAMBRIDGE:
AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS
1921

First Edition 1894

Reprinted 1895 (three times), 1900, 1902, 1904, 1906, 1908, 1909 (twice), 1913, 1916, 1919, 1921.

(With additions and corrections from time to time.)

NOTE.

THIS volume follows in the main the plan and style of the first of the series, containing A Midsummer-Night's Dream. I have, however, adopted two suggestions made with reference to its predecessor, viz., that there should be more literary criticism in the Introduction and less etymology in the Glossary. Any other hints by which the series might be improved would be welcome.

I must acknowledge the assistance of several friends and my indebtedness to previous editors.

A. W. V.

October, 1894.

CONTENTS.

	PAGES
INTRODUCTION	vii—xxx
TWELFTH NIGHT	1—88
NOTES	89—146
GLOSSARY	147—162
APPENDIX	163—164
(SHAKESPEARE AND PURITANISM.)
HINTS ON SHAKESPEARE'S ENGLISH	165—168
INDEX OF WORDS	169—173

INTRODUCTION.

I.

DATES OF THE PUBLICATION AND COMPOSITION OF THE PLAY.

Twelfth Night was first published, so far as we know, in 1623, in the 1st Folio¹ edition of Shakespeare's Published in plays. There is no indication that the comedy ^{1623.} had been previously issued in Quarto.

The probable date of the composition of Twelfth Night is 1601. The play does not occur in the list of Written probably in 1601. Shakespeare's works given by Meres² in his Palladis Tamia, which was published in the autumn of 1598. It is mentioned in an Elizabethan Diary (quoted below) External evidence. in February, 1602. It must therefore have been composed between the autumn of 1598 and the beginning of 1602. There are extracts in it from a song ("Fare- Internal evidence. well, dear heart," II. 3. 109) which first appeared in 1601; and a passage³ in the third Act is thought to allude to certain restrictions on the stage ordered by the Privy Council⁴ in 1600 and 1601. Many modern critics assign

¹ The 1st Folio was the first edition of Shakespeare's collected plays.

² He mentions twelve of Shakespeare's plays.

³ "Words are very rascals since bonds disgraced them" (III. 1. 25). For another passage which may throw some light on the date of the play see the Note on III. 2. 85.

⁴ By an order of the Council issued in June 1600 all the playhouses except the Globe and the Fortune were to be shut up; and even at these theatres the performances were to be limited to two a week. In the next year the Council took further steps against the stage. Dramatists might well complain that "bonds" were laid upon them. See also the note on the "new map" (1600), p. 124.

the composition of Twelfth Night to the year 1601. In style and general character Twelfth Night belongs to the group of comedies which includes Much Ado About Nothing, written between 1598 and 1600, and As You Like It, written probably in 1599.

The Elizabethan Diary referred to above was that of a barrister named John Manningham, who belonged to the Middle Temple. His Diary extends, with certain breaks, from January 1602 to April 1603. The entry which helps us to determine the date of Twelfth Night occurs under the date of February 2, 1602, and is as follows:

Extract referring to "Twelfth Night." “At our feast¹, wee had a play called Twelve Night, or What You Will. Much like the Comedy of Errors, or Menechmi in Plautus; but most like and neere to that in Italian called Inganni². A good practise³ in it to make the steward beleive his lady widowe⁴ was in love with him, by counterfayting a letter as from his lady in general termes, telling him what shee liked best in him, and prescribing his gesture in smiling, his apparaile, &c., and then when he came to practise, making him believe they tooke him to be mad.”

¹ i.e. the Candlemas feast, which formerly marked the close of the Christmas season of rejoicing. The play would be acted in the Hall of the Middle Temple (cf. I Henry VI. II. 4. 3). The Christmas-tide festivities, called “Revels” (see G.), of the four Legal Societies (Inner Temple, Middle Temple, Gray’s Inn, and Lincoln’s Inn) were conducted on a great scale, and always included the acting of plays. These Societies were specially noted for their costly Masques; see the Essay on the Masque prefixed to Milton’s Comus, Pitt Press edition.

² Really Twelfth Night, as we shall see, resembles the Italian play Ingannati more than that “called Inganni.”

³ i.e. trick, scheme; cf. v. 360.

⁴ “It is possible that in the form in which the comedy was performed on Feb. 2, 1602, she was a widow, and that the author subsequently made the change; but it is more likely, as Olivia must have been in mourning for the loss of her brother, that Manningham mistook her condition, and concluded hastily that she lamented the loss of her husband.”—Collier.

II.

THE TITLE OF THE PLAY.

January 6, the festival of the Epiphany and the twelfth day from Christmas, was formerly kept with numerous ceremonies and festivities¹. A common feature of these festivities at Court and at the houses of great nobles was the performance of plays. No doubt, Twelfth Night was so called because it was written for performance on Twelfth-Night—possibly at Court²—and embodied the genial spirit of the Twelfth-Night festivities and revels. In the same way, A Midsummer-Night's Dream owed its title to the fact that it was designed for representation on Midsummer-Night and embodied the traditional associations of Midsummer-Night. Each play took its name from a festival. Each harmonised with the traditions of the festival.

The secondary title What You Will seems to refer to the character of the piece. It is a combination of comedy and romance, touched in the love-scenes with a sentiment that becomes serious, if not tragic. Shakespeare seems to forestall the objection that the play belongs to no particular type of drama, and is hard to describe, by saying—‘call it comedy or romance, What You Will.’ Compare the similar title of the similar work As You Like It. Some, however, think that he meant: ‘if you do not approve of the title Twelfth Night, then call it what you will, by any title you please.’

The Twelfth-Night festival in Shakespeare's time.

Celebrated with plays.

This play written for Twelfth-Night; hence its title.

Compare "A Midsummer-Night's Dream."

Its second title: "What You Will."

¹ See the account in Brand's Popular Antiquities.

² It has been conjectured that Twelfth Night was one of four plays the performance of which before Queen Elizabeth in the Christmas season of 1601—2 is recorded, though their names are not.

III.

THE "SCENE" OF THE PLAY'S ACTION.

The locality of the events of Twelfth Night is not shown by any stage-direction in the 1st Folio. It is indicated, however, by allusions such as "This is Illyria, lady" (I. 2. 2). Most modern texts describe the "Scene" as "A city in Illyria, and the sea-coast near it."

We may identify "Illyria"¹ (so far as we regard it as a The country definite region) with the modern Dalmatia², on the of "Illyria." east coast of the Adriatic. From its association with Venice this country was probably regarded as more or less Italian³ by the Elizabethans. Shakespeare, however, does not really connect the events of Twelfth Night with any precise locality; the play has no touches descriptive of the country such as occur in *The Merchant of Venice*⁴. Its "Illyria" is no less imaginary and indefinite a realm than the "Bohemia" of The Winter's Tale; and the vagueness is appropriate to a romance. Equally indefinite, of course, is the period in which the events are supposed to happen.

IV.

THE PROBABLE SOURCES OF CERTAIN ELEMENTS OF THE PLAY.

Many of Shakespeare's plots are not original. He often takes some existing story and re-tells it, re-creating the

¹ The ordinary Greek name was 'Ιλλυρία—the Latin, Illyricum.

² Its chief city in Shakespeare's time was Spalatro, famous for the ruins of Diocletian's palace; I cannot help wondering whether he had them in mind when he made Antonio speak of

"the memorials and the things of fame
That do renown this city" (III. 3. 23, 24).

³ Cf. the Italian names in the play.

⁴ Cf. the allusions to the "Rialto" (I. 3. 20, 39, 50), and the "tranect" (III. 4. 53).

characters in it and adding new ones, with new incidents. He has done this in the case of Twelfth Night.

The play falls into two divisions : plot (serious) and underplot (comic).

The plot or serious element is the love-story in which Olivia, Viola, Orsino and Sebastian figure. Closely connected with the love-story towards the close of the play is the confusion produced by the resemblance between Viola and Sebastian.

The underplot or comic element is the intrigue against Malvolio. Of course, the two elements, the serious and the comic, are so blended¹ that a division of this kind cannot be quite satisfactory. Plot and underplot are carefully made to overlap. Still, the division seems to give a fairly correct notion of the substance of the play.

Of the underplot we may say at once that it is all, so far as is known, of Shakespeare's own invention.²

With the plot the case stands otherwise ; as Grant White says : "The story of a woman serving her lover in the disguise of a page, and pleading his cause with her rival, who falls in love with her, seems to have been considered common property by the novelists³ and playwrights of the 16th century."

Similarly, the confusions arising through the likeness of two members of a family might also be described as "the common property" of playwrights and novelists¹. We find this notion combined with the above-mentioned story in The main Source used by Shakespeare a novel which was undoubtedly the main source of the plot of Twelfth Night: This novel was Barnabe Rich's Historie of Apolonius and Silla, one of a collection of eight tales called Riche His Farewell to the Militarie Profession (1581), taken from foreign sources.

¹ Note, for example, how the incident of the duel (III. 4), and the encounters which arise through it (IV. 1 and V. 175—215), unite the plot and underplot by bringing together the characters of each : Viola, Olivia and Sebastian on the one hand—Sir Toby, Sir Andrew and Fabian on the other.

² Shakespeare's underplots are usually original.

³ The story is told, with variations, in three well-known collections of tales : in Bandello's Novelle (1554); in Cinthio's Hecatomithi (1565); and in Belleforest's French Histoires Tragiques, where it is adapted from the Italian of Bandello.

Viola's resemblance to Sebastian; her resolve to serve Orsino disguised as a page and then falling in love with him; her involuntarily winning Olivia's love while she pleads Orsino's cause; Olivia's espousal of Sebastian in mistake for Cesario (Viola), and Orsino's transferring his love from Olivia to Viola: all these details and incidents find their counterpart in Rich's novel. Shakespeare re-told the story, refining it and making it far more effective for dramatic purposes.

Practically the same story forms the subject of an anonymous Italian play called *Gli Ingannati*², 'The Cheated,' which was acted at Siena in 1531 and printed at Venice in 1537. In all essentials the plot of the Ingannati presents a close resemblance to the plot of Twelfth Night; and in its introduction (Il Sacrificio) occurs the name Malevolti, which is certainly suggestive of Shakespeare's Malvolio, while one of the characters in the play itself bears the name Fabio, which recalls Olivia's servant Fabian. That the Ingannati was known to Shakespeare seems certain.

¹ This idea is the basis of The Comedy of Errors and of the Menaechmi of Plautus on which The Comedy of Errors was founded; and Manningham was reminded of both these plays when he saw Twelfth Night. Plautus took the notion from the Greek stage. "Greek comedies turning on the likeness of twins seem to have been invariably called Διδυμοί, and plays under this title are mentioned from the hands of six different authors," A. W. Ward, Dramatic Literature, I. 374. Gk. διδυμος = 'twin.'

² The Prologue of the Ingannati expressly claims that the story is original—"never before seen nor read." Perhaps therefore the Ingannati furnished Bandello and Cinthio with the story as told in their collections of tales. The history of any widely spread story or legend is always difficult (if not impossible) to trace.

One other work must be mentioned. This also is an Italian play, with a title similar to that of the last mentioned. It is a piece named Gl' Inganni, Source. 'The Cheats' (1592), written by a certain Curzio Gonzaga. The Inganni does not bear so striking a resemblance as the Ingannati to Twelfth Night, but it is noticeable for this reason: the sister who disguises herself "Cesare" in male attire (and is thereby mistaken for her brother whom she resembles) assumes the name Cesare, and Cesare is almost as suggestive of Cesario as Malevolti of Malvolio.

How, it may be asked, could these Italian plays be known to Shakespeare? I think it very probable that Shakespeare was sufficiently a master of Italian to be able to read the plays in the original; and we know that a great quantity of Italian literature came into England. English translations too of Italian works were very numerous; there may have been Elizabethan versions or adaptations, now lost, of the Ingannati and Gonzaga's Inganni. There was certainly a French translation of the Ingannati under the title Les Abusés; and we may credit Shakespeare with a tolerable knowledge of French, if not of Italian. Moreover, "an Italian troupe of players visited England in 1577—78 and played before the Queen at Windsor, and may have had the play, which was very popular in Italy, with them." The fact that Manningham noticed the resemblance suggests that one of these Italian comedies was familiar, somehow, to Elizabethan playgoers.

I should say, then, with regard to the sources of the plot of Twelfth Night that the three works which claim chief attention as having furnished Shakespeare with some materials for his play are:

- (1) Rich's Historie of Apolonius and Silla (1581), unquestionably the most important source¹;

¹ As Rich's tale (1) contained the essential elements of the plot of Twelfth Night and (2) was in English, there is no need to suppose that

- (2) the anonymous Italian comedy G'l Ingannati (1531);
 (3) Gonzaga's play G'l Inganni (1592).

It must not be supposed that Shakespeare's indebtedness to The extent of Shakespeare's Twelfth Night; its romance and humour; the indebtedness. the manner in which ideas borrowed from other writers are turned to finer issues and improved upon; the whole of the comic underplot; the skilful interweaving of the comic and serious parts; above all, the characterisation: these things, which make Twelfth Night the beautiful work it is, are absolutely Shakespeare's own.

V.

SOME CHARACTERISTICS OF THE PLAY.

Twelfth Night has always been a favourite play with students of Shakespeare. Its charm lies primarily in the union of humour with romance, of diverting action with masterly characterisation.

There is the obvious humour of the scenes in which Malvolio is tricked; of the revelling-scenes wherein Sir Humour.

Andrew is made the butt of his wittier companions; of the duel-scene; and of the confusions that arise through the resemblance of the brother and sister. And a less obvious but equally delightful humour animates many another incident and idea in the play. Thus Orsino's protesting a changeless love for Olivia—and transferring that love to Viola (with Olivia's full approbation); Olivia's protesting that for seven summers she Shakespeare consulted foreign sources such as Bandello and Cinthio and Belleforest, whose collections of stories (Novelle or Histoires) are associated with other plays of Shakespeare.

The names Malevolti and Cesare constitute the indication that Shakespeare knew the two Italian comedies, to which Manningham's remark drew attention. The mixture of foreign and English names of characters is, of course, quite Elizabethan.

Benvolio is a minor character in Romeo and Juliet.

will keep fresh a “brother’s dead love” in cloistered seclusion from the sight of men—and falling in love with the first handsome young man who crosses her path (we hear no more of the dead brother); the fatuous Sir Andrew’s presumption in paying court to the rather imperious Countess; Sebastian’s calm acceptance of Olivia for a wife, and easy self-confidence in his love-affairs, so unlike the tortures of anxiety endured by Olivia and Viola and Orsino: all these things surely (and much else) were “intimated” to the poet by the very “spirit of humours.” The humour of Twelfth Night is certainly one of its chief charms.

Its effect is set off and heightened by combination with a romantic strain. “Romantic” as applied to incident Romance. suggests something remote from actual experience, lying beyond the scope of everyday life. The tone of Twelfth Night is in this sense romantic. Some of the incidents which we have just cited as illustrations of Shakespeare’s humour have also an element of romance; and the play as a whole is romantic in that it is made up of events which, being individually out of the common, assume a tinge of improbability when brought together. Not that this improbability (perhaps I should say unreality) strikes us as we read¹ the play, because we feel, or ought to feel, from the outset that we are moving in a world of romance and whimsical intrigue in which the prosaic conditions of real life and its sober tests do not apply.

Considered merely as a tale Twelfth Night is interesting. There are comedies in which the interest turns Action. more on the characters than on the action. But in

¹ The case is perhaps different when we see the play acted, and Twelfth Night does not for stage-purposes rank among quite the best of Shakespeare’s comedies. Thus its stage-history will not bear comparison with that of Much Ado About Nothing. The reason, I think, is that in actual representation the unreality of a romance becomes too apparent. Romantic incidents, to be effective, should be imagined, not seen. These remarks would also apply to A Midsummer-Night’s Dream, a piece that is comparatively seldom revived on the London stage nowadays.

Twelfth Night the story itself interests and diverts. Our attention is held by what happens.

Of the characters something will be said later. Characterisation is the great feature of Shakespeare's plays, and the characterisation of Twelfth Night is no exception.

Another notable quality of this play is its harmony of design and execution. It is a complete and uniform work: "appearing to have been struck out at a heat, as if the whole plot, its characters and dialogue, had presented themselves at once, in one harmonious group, before the 'mind's eye' of the poet, previously to his actually commencing the formal business of writing¹."

Thus the plot and underplot are worked out, with no omissions or superfluous details, so that each part is fitted to its place; and they are combined into a harmonious whole.

In some plays the interest flags at times; or the work does not keep at the same level. Twelfth Night is not marred by inequalities; there are no ups and downs. Its characteristic is an even, sustained excellence.

Again, the action, characterisation, and diction of the play are suited to each other. There is no elaborate or subtle character-drawing, except possibly in the case of Malvolio. The dramatis personæ are depicted with few but vivid strokes: a method which fits the rapid movement of the play, for amid busy intrigues and a succession of amusing incidents there is no place for complex studies of human nature. And as the characterisation is adapted to the action, so is the diction appropriate to both—light and pointed in the colloquial, comic scenes of the underplot, but informed in the serious parts with a poetic grace finely expressive of the comedy's higher strain of romance and sentiment. Justly then do critics dwell on the "perfect unity" of Twelfth Night.

Another feature is the genial spirit that pervades the piece—its tone of pure kindness and pleasure. "This," says Hazlitt², "is justly considered as one of the most delightful of Shakespear's comedies. It is full of sweetness and pleasantry. It is perhaps too good-natured for comedy. It has little satire, and no spleen. It aims at the ludicrous rather than the ridiculous. It makes us laugh at the follies of mankind, not despise them, and still less bear any ill-will towards them." We cannot help thinking that Twelfth Night was the outcome of a period of serenity; though it has the necessary hints at life's shadows.

¹ Verplanck.

² Characters of Shakespear's Plays.

VI.

THE CHARACTERS OF THE PLAY.

The heroine is Viola, since her assumption of disguise is the motive-spring of the plot, and our sympathies are mainly centred upon her. To think of Twelfth Night is to think at once of Viola.

She is characterised by the essentially feminine qualities of tenderness, modesty and shrinking delicacy of feeling. These qualities become more conspicuous when we compare her with other maidens in Shakespeare who assume the disguise of male attire. Rosalind for instance has a buoyant vitality of spirit that carries her through difficulties; Portia can trust in any emergency to her virile intellect, ready wit and force of will. Viola does not possess these gifts; she is a graceful, imaginative girl who has conceived a plan that brings her into hazardous places through which she has scarce strength of heart or head to steer her course. She is filled with "a sweet consciousness of her feminine nature," and though she plays her part creditably, "never forgets, nor allows us to forget, that she is playing a part¹."

Her girlishness reveals itself in little ways; and when she is confronted with danger, as in the duel-scene, she almost breaks down in her disguise, and we wonder whether the discovery can be delayed. This antithesis between the boldness of her scheme, with its attendant pretence of manhood¹, and the girlish gentleness of her nature has a great charm and humour.

¹ Mrs Jameson, Characteristics of Women.

Viola is very loyal and true. Herself in love with Orsino, she still pleads for him most earnestly with Olivia—indeed, with far greater earnestness than he had manifested in his own suit. She would never dream of playing him false :

“ I'll do my best
To woo your lady—[Aside] Yet, a barful strife !
Whoe'er I woo, myself would be his wife.”

Her love, quiet and unchanging, contrasts with Orsino's fickle, over-eloquent fancy, no less than with Olivia's impetuous passion. And it is marked by a lowliness very characteristic of her modest nature ; for she seems quite content to accept Orsino's love at second-hand. Would Portia or Rosalind have been so acquiescent ?

Olivia is a great lady, dignified and competent. She rules her household and directs its affairs with ease and discretion, as Sebastian notices directly. The members of the household evidently stand in awe of their mistress. That she has admirable common sense may be inferred from her remarks about the Clown and her reproof to Malvolio (I. 5. 97—104).

She is somewhat cold and self-contained ; inclined to keep her social inferiors at a distance. Thus there is no familiarity between her and her gentlewoman Maria. “ I see you what you are, you are too proud,” says Viola at their first meeting. It may be partly the pride of rank : it is doomed to be humbled.

For by a freak of fortune Olivia falls suddenly and completely in love with the Duke's page, though she will have none of the Duke himself.

No longer reserved, no longer careful about her rank, she deigns to woo him, and his opposition only increases her wilful determination, since she is so accustomed to have her own way. She knows of course that she is giving cause for unfriendly criticism of her conduct, the more so because she had protested her intention to withdraw from the world; yet she pursues her object persistently, and ends by throwing all dignity and decorum to the winds and carrying her lover (as she supposes) off to the church.

¹ A pretty comic touch is her use of bold slang phrases like “ Westward-ho ! ” (said with a fine assumption of mannishness), III. i. 145.

As with Viola, there is an antithesis between the natural character of Olivia and the part which a caprice of fortune leads her to play. Stated barely, her conduct appears somewhat indelicate; yet no such impression occurs to us in reading the piece because the whole story is treated in a spirit of pure romance. It is all too fanciful and poetic to be taken and criticised very seriously. Compared with Viola, Olivia does not appeal very strongly to our sympathies, though there is a strain of kindness in her¹.

It is as Malvolio's foe that Maria, the sharp and witty of tongue, is prominent. She originates the plot Maria against him, carries it through, and when it is reaching its end passes out of the play. In her scheming against Malvolio she seems to be the very spirit of malicious wit assailing its natural enemy, solemn dulness. She is typically appropriate to a comedy of intrigue, and moves in it as in her element. Intrigue is needed to bring out the points of such a character.

Maria has wonderful sharpness of insight as of speech. She reads Malvolio's character through and through, and perceives defects hidden from all the others (except perhaps the Clown). Hence in her letter she is able to play precisely upon his weaknesses and advise him to commit the very faults to which he is prone; and when he comes into Olivia's presence with his loverlike airs how adroitly does her question "Why appear you?" (III. 4. 40, 41) lead him on to cut the most ridiculous figure.

Another proof of her cleverness is the ease with which she adapts herself to those about her: merry enough with Sir Toby and his friends, but demure before Olivia. She has ambition; she means all along to marry Sir Toby and become "my lady." Her design is no secret; the Clown jokes her about it (I. 5. 29), and Sir Toby is complacently conscious that she "adores" him (II. 3. 196). Probably it is as much with a view to pleasing Sir Toby (who cannot endure Malvolio) as to gratifying her own dislike of the steward that she proposes, and takes so much pains to carry out, the plot. Its success at any rate leads to the much desired result, Sir Toby marrying her "in recompense" (V. 372) of her cleverness and trouble¹.

¹ Cf. her anxiety about Malvolio (III. 4. 67—70), and her pity for him in his humiliation (v. 353—363, 377).

Orsino² is an attractive figure:

Orsino.

"Of fresh and stainless youth;
In voices well divulg'd, free, learn'd, and valiant,
And in dimension and the shape of nature
A gracious person."

He is kindly and courteous to all; eloquent and full of poetic thoughts and sentiment. Yet, though he may win sympathy at first he does not retain it; we begin after a time to doubt the genuineness of his feeling. It is a self-conscious melancholy in which really he delights. He feeds on his love as on some dainty fare. He makes it serve as an occasion of fine speeches; for, like Shakespeare's Richard II., he is a connoisseur of phrases. As he speaks of his sorrows he is not the true lover but the literary artist using his own emotions as a "subject." Like Richard, he does little: he merely talks most beautifully and pays court by deputy instead of going himself. When at the close he calmly transfers to Viola what he supposes to be his affections we are not surprised: we have ceased to believe much in them. His love of Olivia was almost a fiction; she had only "enchanted his imagination, not won his heart," just as Othello fascinated the girlish fancy of Desdemonia rather than really won her love. We may doubt indeed whether Orsino would ever be much in love with anyone but himself. An amiable egoist, he would always remain in his own eyes the person of chief consequence, and accept Viola's devotion as a matter of course.

¹ Cf. his remark "I could marry this wench for this device," said at the end of the letter-scene, II. 5. 200.

² The name, no doubt, was suggested by that of the great Italian family of Orsini. He is described as a Duke only in the first Act; in the rest of the play he is called 'Count.'

Malvolio has much to recommend him¹. He seems a capable and trustworthy man, sober and diligent in discharge of duties. Olivia turns to him in any difficulty, evidently relying on his discretion (I. 5. 116, 318, II. 3. 77, III. 4. 5—7). She is much concerned about his supposed malady, and "would not have him miscarry for the half of her dowry" (III. 4. 67—70). Her good opinion is strong testimony to his merits. Unfortunately those merits are marred by a defect which Olivia describes with precision when she says, "O you are sick of self-love, Malvolio" (I. 5. 97).

"Self-love" implies extreme self-conceit and vanity. With Malvolio "self-love" is what Pope calls "the ruling passion." It dominates his whole character. Self-conceited people of a serious turn are apt to be censorious and find fault; they judge others by the lofty standard of their own imaginary excellencies and find them wanting. Malvolio has a positive gift for fault-finding. With what unctuous satisfaction does he deliver Olivia's reprimand to the revellers and reprove Maria (II. 3. 93—109, 130—133)! How he enjoys the thought of censuring Sir Toby and bidding him "amend his ways" (II. 5. 61—81)! His bearing towards his fellow-servants may be inferred from Maria's remark that if he does go mad, and has to be confined, "the house will be the quieter" (III. 4. 147). Even in such a small matter as overtaking Viola and giving her Olivia's ring he lets his weakness steal out: "You might have saved me my pains" (II. 2. 5, 6). Malvolio in short is one of those over-virtuous people who love virtue not only—perhaps, not chiefly—for its own sake but for the right that it gives them (they suppose) to judge and condemn their neighbours.

¹ It was Charles Lamb's view that Malvolio "is not essentially ludicrous," but "becomes comic by accident."

He has not a grain of humour—indeed, self-conceit and humour are incompatible—and little sympathy with his fellow-creatures: the self-conceited are too much wrapt up in themselves to have wide views and tastes. Hence Malvolio takes things too seriously¹ and regards all that lies outside his own narrow sympathies as wrong. Disinclined to carouse, he thinks indulgence in “cakes and ale” an unpardonable “disorder.” Too dull to see a joke, he looks on the Clown’s jests as offences against sense (I. 5. 89—96). Such men magnify trifles into grave misdemeanours.

His vanity about his personal appearance and manners is ludicrous. He “practises behaviour”; is confident that his “complexion,” if any, will touch Olivia, and that all who look on him must love him; is not unconcerned about his dress—“branched velvet gowns” and the like; and feels that a grand air, “the humour of state,” will become him mightily.

He has an overweening sense of his own importance, and forgets that he is not “any more than a steward” (II. 3. 123). The other members of the household are in his eyes “lighter people,” “idle shallow things,” whose element he is above (III. 4. 136, 137).

In fact, Malvolio has the most exalted opinion of his own merits: is “the best persuaded of himself,...crammed, as he thinks, with excellencies” (II. 3. 162, 163); and the signal proof of his mingled self-conceit, want of humour, personal vanity and self-importance is the readiness wherewith he credits the preposterous idea that Olivia loves him—and “stoops to conquer.” That she, graced with youth and beauty, rank and wealth, and wooed by the charming Orsino, sovereign of the realm, should prefer her prosaic house-steward: this notion does not strike Malvolio as at all strange—“there is example for ‘t,” he reflects: and what² more can be said?

¹ He mistakes “bird-bolts” for “cannon-bullets” (I. 5. 100).

² Note specially the whole of Maria’s description of him (II. 3).

³ Maria hints at another aspect of his character when she speaks of him as a “time-pleaser” (II. 3. 160). We may well attribute to his censoriousness a touch of that hypocrisy from which the Puritanism of

Yet one is a little sorry for him. He suffers, surely, more than he deserves, and the scene of the "dark room" (iv. 2) has pathos as well as humour. The bitterness of the humiliation inflicted upon Malvolio almost raises it into the region of tragedy, for mortifying as it would be to any one, it must be well-nigh intolerable to a man of his temperament. Olivia's sympathy, however, may be some salve to his wounded amour propre (v. 353—363, 377).

Sir Toby, with his wit, relish of humour and genius for sociability, reminds us in a far-off way of Falstaff, and Sir Toby. inspires something of the liking which we cannot help feeling for his greater prototype. Perhaps we ought not to like this rollicking toper any more than Sir John, but most of us do, in an apologetic fashion : he has such a genial way with him, so keen a sense of fun, such good temper. He is brave too (unlike Sir Andrew) and manly : witness his readiness in encountering Sebastian. He treats his friend shabbily, fooling money out of him, but does it with a diverting adroitness which makes the jest of the whole business hide the meanness of his conduct. For all his intercourse with the servants of the household, he retains a sense of his rank, and it comes out very comically at times, as in the letter-scene when Malvolio presumes to call him "kinsman" (II. 5. 61). He has a rough and ready sort of cleverness that gratifies his love of fun by devising comic situations such as the episode of the duel (where he shows skill in bringing the unwilling combatants together). But his cleverness is outdone by Maria's : admiration of her scheme brings matters to a crisis between them ; and by a fine turn of poetic justice, while he is ridiculing Malvolio for falling an easy victim to the trick, he is himself caught in her net. And, if we mistake not, she will keep him in better order with that sharp tongue.

Sir Andrew is the butt on whom Sir Toby (like Maria and the Clown) exercises his wit : foolish himself, Sir Andrew, he is the cause of admirable fooling in others. He some was not exempt. A conscientious Puritan would not have followed the injunction about the "yellow stockings" ; and then that "branched velvet gown!"

is also the echo¹ of his friend in such kind that apart from his dulness he can scarcely be said to have any personality. He follows Sir Toby's lead always; repeats his "very phrases"; and whatever Sir Toby bids him do, whether it be to stay a week longer or write a challenge, mildly acquiesces. Up to the very end no suspicion of his friend's false play crosses his thoughts. His confidence and admiration remain unshaken (v. 196—198); and his last words in the play are an offer of assistance to Sir Toby so that they may keep "together" (v. 210, 211). Sir Andrew typifies the fantastic fool—Malvolio, the solemn coxcomb; but whereas Malvolio perceives how he has been treated and thus stirs our sympathy, Sir Andrew is armed with the happy unconsciousness and self-content of true imbecility, so that pity were merely wasted upon him. His cowardice needs no comment.

The Clown Feste² shows himself a shrewd observer of men and things; he judges Orsino aright (II. 4. 75—81), The Clown. and perhaps Malvolio too (I. 5. 84—87). His insight into character is combined with versatility; he readily estimates the company in which he is and suits his bearing to it, always "adapting himself to the mood of the moment". Thus, he humours the sentimental Duke by singing him dreamy, old-world ballads; yet joins the two knights in their carouse, talks amusing nonsense, and starts the "catch." To quote his own description of himself, he is "for all waters" (i.e. ready to play whatever part the occasion requires), and fulfils Viola's estimate (III. I. 67—74) of the complete jester, observing the "mood" and "quality" of those on whom he jests, and "the time." Indirectly his songs, in their varied style, illustrate the different characters of the people to whom they are addressed, and thus have a dramatic relation to the general movement of the piece.

¹ See I. 3. 67, 68, note; and cf. The Merry Wives of Windsor, where Slender is the "echo" of Justice Shallow. This feature of Sir Andrew's character is much emphasised in the play.

² From Lat. festus, 'cheerful, gay'; a fitting name for a jester.

³ Gervinus, who brings out this point admirably.

He is less wise and "deep-contemplative¹" than Touchstone in As You Like It (with whom one naturally compares him). Touchstone, having seen "cities of men and manners," is more of a philosopher, and more of a satirist; a jaded courtier, he uses his folly as a cloak for railing sarcasm against the world and its ways; there is method—and bitterness—in his madness. Feste inclines rather to the cap-and-bells side of his profession. A practical joke like the part he plays in the "dark room" suits him, but would scarcely suit Touchstone. Feste is rather the jester; better tempered, if less pointed, in his folly. He has more humour; Touchstone more wit. Yet his cleverness is such that only by irony is he called "the Fool" of the play; for those who are really made to appear as fools are Sir Andrew, a "natural," and Malvolio, a "wise man folly-fallen."

We see little of Sebastian, but that little leaves a pleasant impression. Perhaps the most striking feature of Sebastian. his character, and dramatically the most important because of the contrast which it points, is his blunt, downright simplicity, which finds vent in vigorous deeds. Unlike Orsino, he acts, and neither reflects nor talks much. Picture Orsino in his place when Olivia mistakes him for Cesario: how subtly Orsino would have analysed the situation, how eloquent and poetical he would have been, and how irresolute! Sebastian merely offers some commonplace remarks on the strangeness of the affair, quickly grasps the essential facts that Olivia is a desirable wife and wants to marry him, and makes no more ado about settling the matter straightway than about repaying Sir Andrew's rash blows. This plain practicality stands out effectively in a piece so full of sentiment; and his entire naturalness is a relief after the artificial self-consciousness of Olivia and Orsino.

¹ Cf. As You Like It, II. 7. 30—32:

"My lungs began to crow like chanticleer,
That fools should be so deep-contemplative,
And I did laugh."

VII.

OUTLINE OF THE STORY OF THE PLAY.

Act I., Scene 1. At the palace of Orsino, Duke of Illyria. We hear of his suit to the Countess Olivia, who rejects his offers of love.

Scene 2. On the coast of Illyria. Viola, a young girl of noble birth, has just been wrecked with her twin-brother, Sebastian; she does not know whether or not he has been lost in the wreck. Learning from the captain of the shipwrecked vessel that the ruler of the country is Duke Orsino, a former friend of her dead father, she conceives the plan of disguising herself as a page-boy and entering Orsino's service.

Scene 3. At the house of Olivia. The scene introduces us to three characters who will be conspicuous in the underplot, viz. Olivia's maid, Maria; her kinsman, Sir Toby Belch; and his friend, Sir Andrew Aguecheek, a foolish knight, who, at Sir Toby's instigation, is a suitor for Olivia's hand.

Scene 4. At Orsino's palace. Viola has carried out her plan, and is now, under the name Cesario, a page of Orsino. She is sent by Orsino to plead his cause with Olivia. Viola herself has fallen in love with Orsino.

Scene 5. At Olivia's house. We meet three new characters—Olivia; the Clown, Feste, the jester of her household; and the prim, rather puritanical, steward, Malvolio. Orsino's messenger, Cesario (Viola), arrives, is admitted to Olivia's presence, and pleads for Orsino. Olivia falls in love with Cesario, whom she believes, of course, to be a young man. Cesario leaves, and Olivia sends a ring after him, and bids him come again.

(The position therefore of the love-affairs at the end of the first Act is this: Orsino loves Olivia; Viola loves Orsino; Olivia loves Viola, i.e. Cesario.)

Act II., Scene 1. On the coast of Illyria. Sebastian, Viola's twin-brother, was saved at the wreck by a sailor, Antonio. He is now telling Antonio about his sister, Viola—how much she resembled him. He believes that she has perished. Bidding farewell to Antonio, he goes on his way to Orsino's court. Antonio, who has conceived a strong liking for Sebastian, follows him.

Scene 2. Near Olivia's house. Malvolio overtakes Viola (Cesario), who has just left Olivia, and gives her the ring sent by Olivia. Viola guesses the secret of Olivia's love.

Scene 3. At Olivia's house: a revelling scene. Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and the Clown are drinking and singing. Maria comes to tell them that Olivia is vexed at the disturbance. Then Malvolio enters and reprimands them in Olivia's name. On his departure Maria proposes a scheme against him: she will compose a letter which shall delude him into believing that his mistress, Olivia, is in love with him.

Scene 4. At Orsino's palace: a scene of sentiment, in which the chief actors are Orsino and Viola, who speaks the famous lines "She never told her love." Orsino again sends Viola to Olivia. (The interest of the scene lies in the fuller revelation of Orsino's character and of Viola's feelings towards him.)

Scene 5. In Olivia's garden. Malvolio finds the letter written by Maria and is deluded exactly as she wished.

Act III., Scene 1. In Olivia's garden. Viola enters, and meets the Clown; he goes into the house to tell Olivia of Viola's coming. The rest of the scene passes between Viola and Olivia who reveals her love of the page. Viola repels Olivia's overtures.

Scene 2. At Olivia's house. Sir Andrew has seen the meeting of Olivia and Viola in the last scene, and is jealous of the favour shown by the Countess to the page. Sir Toby, knowing Sir Andrew to be a coward, persuades him to challenge Viola to a duel.

Scene 3. A street in the city. Sebastian and Antonio have arrived in the town, though Antonio knows that for certain reasons it is dangerous for him to be there. Antonio lends Sebastian his purse and goes off to seek a lodging, while Sebastian wanders about the town. (Sebastian and Viola being in the same city, and Viola being dressed as a young man—indeed, like her brother, III. 5. 416—418, v. 241—we now expect confusions to arise from the resemblance between them.)

Scene 4. In Olivia's garden. Olivia sends for Malvolio; Maria hints that he is very strange in his manner. Malvolio appears, dressed in a peculiar way, and behaves as if he were Olivia's lover—to the amazement of Olivia. Believing him to be really affected in his head, Olivia hands him over to the care of Sir Toby, who carries the scheme against Malvolio a step further and has him shut up in a dark room.

We then pass to the proposed duel between Sir Andrew and Viola. Each is really afraid to fight, but Sir Toby and Fabian urge them on; and then, just when they are about to draw their swords, Antonio enters, mistakes Viola (Cesario) for Sebastian, and wishes to fight in Viola's place with Sir Andrew. Antonio, however, is now arrested by officers of Orsino. In his difficulty he appeals to Viola for the purse lent to Sebastian, and more confusions arise through the resemblance of the twins.

Act IV., Scene 1. Near Olivia's house. The Clown meets Sebastian and supposes him to be Cesario (Viola). Sir Andrew and Sir Toby entering make a similar mistake, and Sir Andrew resumes (as he thinks) the quarrel with Cesario which Antonio interrupted. Olivia comes on the scene, repeats, of course, the mistake made by Sir Andrew and Sir Toby, whom she bids leave her, and asks Sebastian to go into the house with her. He consents, wondering what it all means.

Scene 2. At Olivia's house. Malvolio has been confined by Sir Toby in a dark room because of his supposed madness. The Clown visits and talks with him, first in the assumed character of a clergyman, then in his own person. The Clown agrees to take a letter from Malvolio to Olivia. (This letter, given to Olivia in Act v., explains the complications connected with the scheme against Malvolio; we feel now that the underplot has been nearly worked out.)

Scene 3. In Olivia's garden. Sebastian expresses his amazement at Olivia's conduct towards him—a stranger to her. Then Olivia enters, with a priest, and begs Sebastian—Cesario, as she thinks—that they may be “betrothed” to each other. He agrees—no doubt astonished at, yet not resenting, a wife. She (still thinking him Cesario) must be equally surprised.

Act V. Near Olivia's house. The complications of plot and underplot are cleared up. Viola and Sebastian meet in the presence of most of the characters of the play, and the resemblance between them explains all difficulties. Olivia finds that she has been “betrothed” to Sebastian, not to Cesario, and is content with the exchange. Orsino, as he cannot win Olivia, transfers his love to Viola. Malvolio's letter is delivered to Olivia (who in the distraction of her love-affairs had forgotten all about him), and she sends for him. At his entrance Fabian explains the trick played upon Malvolio, and adds that as a reward for her cleverness Sir Toby has married Maria.

In considering the structure of the play we should note how important to the plot the notion of mistaken identity becomes during the last two Acts. The effect of the confusion produced by the resemblance between Sebastian and Viola runs throughout these two Acts, the scene of “the dark room” (iv. 2) alone excepted.

VIII.

I am glad to have an opportunity of adding now (1903) some remarks in the fine work on Shakespeare by the Danish critic, Brandes (English translation, 1898).

"Twelfth Night is perhaps the most graceful and harmonious comedy Shakespeare ever wrote. It is certainly that in which all the notes the poet strikes, the note of seriousness and of raillyry, of passion, of tenderness, and of laughter, blend in the richest and fullest concord. It is like a symphony in which no strain can be dispensed with, or like a picture veiled in a golden haze, into which all the colours resolve themselves....

"Schlegel made long ago the penetrating observation that, in the opening speech of Twelfth Night, Shakespeare reminds us how the same word, 'fancy,' was applied in his day both to love and to fancy in the modern sense of the term; whence the critic argued, not without ingenuity, that love, regarded as an affair of the imagination rather than of the heart, is the fundamental theme running through all the variations of the play....

"While Olivia is sighing in vain for Viola, she necessarily appears as though seized with a mild erotic madness, similar to that of the Duke: and the folly of each is parodied in a witty and delightful fashion by Malvolio's entirely ludicrous love for his mistress, and vain confidence that she returns it. Olivia feels and says this of herself, when she exclaims—'Go call him hither' etc." (III. 4. 15, 16). This parody is part of the balance and symmetry of the play's structure.

Dr Brandes notes that the incident of Olivia falling in love with Orsino's disguised messenger finds a close parallel in a Spanish novel, entitled Diana (well known to the Elizabethans through a translation), by the Portuguese writer Montemayor.

The Malvolio-element has always been the main source of the popularity of Twelfth Night, especially as regards the theatre; and Dr Brandes reminds us that the set of complimentary verses prefixed to the 1640 edition of Shakespeare's Poems, in referring to the dramatist's most popular characters, mentions only three from the Comedies—thus:

"let but Beatrice
And Benedicke be seene, loe in a trice
The Cockpit, Galleries, Boxes, all are full
To hear Malvoglio, that crosse garter'd Gull."

TWELFTH NIGHT;

OR,

WHAT YOU WILL.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

ORSINO, Duke of Illyria.

SEBASTIAN, brother to Viola.

ANTONIO, a sea captain, friend to Sebastian.

A Sea Captain, friend to Viola.

VALENTINE, } gentlemen attending on the Duke.
CURIO,

SIR TOBY BELCH, uncle to Olivia.

SIR ANDREW AGUECHEEK.

MALVOLIO, steward to Olivia.

FABIAN, } servants to Olivia.
FESTE, a clown,

OLIVIA.

VIOLA.

MARIA, Olivia's woman.

Lords, a Priest, Sailors, Officers, Musicians, and Attendants.

SCENE—A city in Illyria, and the sea-coast near it.

TWELFTH NIGHT;

OR,

WHAT YOU WILL.

ACT I.

SCENE I. The Duke's Palace.

Enter Duke, CURIO, and other Lords; Musicians attending.

Duke. If music be the food of love, play on;
Give me excess of it, that, surfeiting,
The appetite may sicken, and so die.
That strain again! it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear like the sweet sound
That breathes upon a bank of violets, Stealing and giving odour! Enough; no more:
'Tis not so sweet now as it was before.
O spirit of love, how quick and fresh art thou!
That, notwithstanding thy capacity

10

Receiveth as the sea, nought enters there,
Of what validity and pitch soe'er,
But falls into abatement and low price,
Even in a minute! so full of shapes is fancy,

That it alone is high fantastical.

Curio. Will you go hunt, my lord?

Duke.

What, Curio?

Curio. The hart.

Duke. Why, so I do, the noblest that I have:

O, when mine eyes did see Olivia first,

Methought she purg'd the air of pestilence!

20

That instant was I turn'd into a hart;

And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,

E'er since pursue me.

Enter VALENTINE.

How now! what news from her?

Valentine. So please my lord, I might not be admitted;
But from her handmaid do return this answer:
The element itself, till seven years' heat,
Shall not behold her face at ample view;
But, like a cloistress, she will veiled walk,
And water once a day her chamber round
With eye-offending brine: all this to season
A brother's dead love, which she would keep fresh
And lasting in her sad remembrance.

Duke. O, she that hath a heart of that fine frame
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will she love, when the rich golden shaft
Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else
That live in her; when liver, brain, and heart,
These sovereign thrones, are all supplied, and fill'd
Her sweet perfections, with one self king!
Away before me to sweet beds of flowers:
Love-thoughts lie rich when canopied with bowers. [Exeunt.]

40

SCENE II. The sea-coast.

Enter VIOLA, a Captain, and Sailors.

Viola. What country, friends, is this?

Captain. This is Illyria, lady.

Viola. And what should I do in Illyria?

My brother he is in Elysium.

Perchance he is not drown'd: what think you, sailors?

Captain. It is perchance that you yourself were sav'd.

Viola. O my poor brother! and so perchance may he be.

Captain. True, madam: and, to comfort you with chance,
Assure yourself, after our ship did split,
When you, and those poor number sav'd with you, 10
Hung on our driving boat, I saw your brother,
Most provident in peril, bind himself—
Courage and hope both teaching him the practice—
To a strong mast that liv'd upon the sea;
Where, like Arion on the dolphin's back,
I saw him hold acquaintance with the waves
So long as I could see.

Viola. For saying so, there's gold:
Mine own escape unfoldeth to my hope,
Whereto thy speech serves for authority, 20
The like of him. Know'st thou this country?

Captain. Ay, madam, well; for I was bred and born
Not three hours' travel from this very place.

Viola. Who governs here?

Captain. A noble duke, in nature as in name.

Viola. What is his name?

Captain. Orsino.

Viola. Orsino! I have heard my father name him:
He was a bachelor then.

Captain. And so is now, or was so very late; 30
 For but a month ago I went from hence,
 And then 'twas fresh in murmur,—as, you know,
 What great ones do the less will prattle of,—
 That he did seek the love of fair Olivia.

Viola. What's she?

Captain. A virtuous maid, the daughter of a count
 That died some twelvemonth since; then leaving her
 In the protection of his son, her brother,
 Who shortly also died: for whose dear love,
 They say, she hath abjur'd the company 40
 And sight of men.

Viola. O that I serv'd that lady,
 And might not be deliver'd to the world,
 Till I had made mine own occasion mellow,
 What my estate is!

Captain. That were hard to compass;
 Because she will admit no kind of suit,
 No, not the duke's.

Viola. There is a fair behaviour in thee, captain;
 And though that nature with a beauteous wall
 Doth oft close in pollution, yet of thee
 I will believe thou hast a mind that suits 50
 With this thy fair and outward character.
 I prithee,—and I'll pay thee bounteously,— Conceal me what I am; and be my aid
 For such disguise as haply shall become
 The form of my intent. I'll serve this duke:
 Thou shalt present me as an eunuch to him:
 It may be worth thy pains; for I can sing,
 And speak to him in many sorts of music,
 That will allow me very worth his service.
 What else may hap, to time I will commit; 60

Only shape thou thy silence to my wit.

Captain. Be you his eunuch, and your mute I'll be:
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see.

Viola. I thank thee: lead me on.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. Olivia's house.

Enter Sir TOBY BELCH and MARIA.

Sir Toby. What a plague means my niece, to take the death of her brother thus? I am sure care's an enemy to life.

Maria. By my troth, Sir Toby, you must come in earlier o' nights: your cousin, my lady, takes' great exceptions to your ill hours.

Sir Toby. Why, let her except before excepted.

Maria. Ay, but you must confine yourself within the modest limits of order. 9

Sir Toby. Confine! I'll confine myself no finer than I am: these clothes are good enough to drink in; and so be these boots too,—an they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps.

Maria. That quaffing and drinking will undo you: I heard my lady talk of it yesterday; and of a foolish knight that you brought in one night here to be her wooer.

Sir Toby. Who, Sir Andrew Aguecheek?

Maria. Ay, he.

Sir Toby. He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria. 20

Maria. What's that to the purpose?

Sir Toby. Why, he has three thousand ducats a year.

Maria. Ay, but he'll have but a year in all these ducats: he's a very fool and a prodigal.

Sir Toby. Fie, that you'll say so! he plays o' the viol-de-gamboys, and speaks three or four languages word for word without book, and hath all the good gifts of nature. 29

Maria. He hath, indeed, almost natural: for, besides that he's a fool, he's a great quarreller; and, but that he hath the gift of a coward to allay the gust he hath in quarrelling, 'tis thought among the prudent he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

Sir Toby. By this hand, they are scoundrels and substractors that say so of him. Who are they?

Maria. They that add, moreover, he's drunk nightly in your company. 39

Sir Toby. With drinking healths to my niece. I'll drink to her as long as there is a passage in my throat and drink in Illyria: he's a coward and a coystril that will not drink to my niece till his brains turn o' the toe like a parish-top. What, wench! Castiliano vulgo; for here comes Sir Andrew Agueface.

Enter Sir ANDREW AGUECHEEK.

Sir Andrew. Sir Toby Belch! how now, Sir Toby Belch!

Sir Toby. Sweet Sir Andrew!

Sir Andrew. Bless you, fair shrew. 50

Maria. And you too, sir.

Sir Toby. Accost, Sir Andrew, accost.

Sir Andrew. What's that?

Sir Toby. My niece's chambermaid.

Sir Andrew. Good Mistress Accost, I desire better acquaintance.

Maria. My name is Mary, sir.

Sir Andrew. Good Mistress Mary Accost,—

Sir Toby. You mistake, knight: “accost” is front her, woo her. 60

Sir Andrew. By my troth, I would not in this company. Is that the meaning of “accost”?

Maria. Fare you well, gentlemen.

Sir Toby. An thou let part so, Sir Andrew, would thou mightst never draw sword again.

Sir Andrew. An you part so, mistress, I would I might never draw sword again. Fair lady, do you think you have fools in hand?

Maria. Sir, I have not you by the hand. 70

Sir Andrew. Marry, but you shall have: and here's my hand.

Maria. Now, sir, thought is free: I pray you, bring your hand to the buttery-bar, and let it drink.

Sir Andrew. Wherefore, sweet-heart? what's your metaphor?

Maria. It's dry, sir.

Sir Andrew. Why, I think so: I am not such an ass but I can keep my hand dry. But what's your jest? 80

Maria. A dry jest, sir.

Sir Andrew. Are you full of them?

Maria. Ay, sir, I have them at my fingers' ends:
marry, now I let go your hand, I am barren. — [Exit.

Sir Toby. O knight, thou lackest a cup of canary:
when did I see thee so put down?

Sir Andrew. Never in your life, I think; unless you see canary put me down. Methinks sometimes I have no more wit than a Christian or an ordinary man has:
but I am a great eater of beef, and I believe that does harm to my wit. 91

Sir Toby. No question.

Sir Andrew. An I thought that, I'd forswear it. I'll ride home to-morrow, Sir Toby.

Sir Toby. Pourquoi, my dear knight?

Sir Andrew. What is "pourquoi"? do or not do? I would I had bestowed that time in the tongues that I have in fencing, dancing, and bear-baiting: O had I but followed the arts!

Sir Toby. Then hadst thou had an excellent head of hair. 101

Sir Andrew. Why, would that have mended my hair?

Sir Toby. Past question; for thou seest it will not curl by nature.

Sir Andrew. But it becomes me well enough, does't not?

Sir Toby. Excellent; it hangs like flax on a distaff; and I hope to see a housewife take thee and spin it off.

Sir Andrew. Faith, I'll home to-morrow, Sir Toby: your niece will not be seen; or if she be, it's four to one she'll none of me: the count himself here hard by woos her.

Sir Toby. She'll none o' the count: she'll not match above her degree, neither in estate, years, nor wit; I have heard her swear't. Tut, there's life in't, man.

Sir Andrew. I'll stay a month longer. I am a fellow o' the strangest mind i' the world; I delight in masques and revels sometimes altogether. 121

Sir Toby. Art thou good at these kickshawses, knight?

Sir Andrew. As any man in Illyria, whatsoever he be, under the degree of my betters; and yet I will not compare with an old man.

Sir Toby. What is thy excellence in a galliard, knight?

Sir Andrew. Faith, I can cut a caper.

Sir Toby. And I can cut the mutton to't. 130

Sir Andrew. And I think I have the back-trick simply as strong as any man in Illyria.

Sir Toby. Wherefore are these things hid? wherefore have these gifts a curtain before 'em? are they like to take dust, like Mistress Mall's picture? why dost thou not go to church in a galliard, and come home in a coranto? My very walk should be a jig. What dost thou mean? is it a world to hide virtues in? I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was formed under the star of a galliard.

Sir Andrew. Ay, 'tis strong, and does indifferent well in a flame-coloured stock. Shall we set about some revels?

Sir Toby. What shall we do else? were we not born under Taurus?

Sir Andrew. Taurus! that's sides and heart.

Sir Toby. No, sir; it is legs and thighs. Let me see thee caper [Sir Andrew dances]: ha! higher: ha, ha!—excellent!

[Exeunt. 151]

SCENE IV. The Duke's Palace.

Enter VALENTINE, and VIOLA in man's attire.

Valentine. If the duke continue these favours towards you, Cesario, you are like to be much advanced: he hath known you but three days, and already you are no stranger.

Viola. You either fear his humour or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love: is he inconstant, sir, in his favours?

Valentine. No, believe me.

Viola. I thank you. Here comes the count.

Enter Duke, CURIO, and Attendants.

Duke. Who saw Cesario, he?

10

Viola. On your attendance, my lord; here.

Duke. Stand you awhile aloof.—Cesario,
Thou know'st no less but all; I have unclasp'd
To thee the book even of my secret soul:
Therefore, good youth, address thy gait unto her;
Be not denied access, stand at her doors,
And tell them, there thy fixed foot shall grow
Till thou have audience.

Viola. Sure, my noble lord,
If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow
As it is spoke, she never will admit me.

20

Duke. Be clamorous, and leap all civil bounds,
Rather than make unprofited return.

Viola. Say I do speak with her, my lord, what then?

Duke. O, then unfold the passion of my love,
Surprise her with discourse of my dear faith!
It shall become thee well to act my woes;
She will attend it better in thy youth
Than in a nuncio of more grave aspect.

Viola. I think not so, my lord.

Duke. Dear lad, believe it;
For they shall yet belie thy happy years, 30
That say thou art a man: Diana's lip
Is not more smooth and rubious; thy small pipe
Is as the maiden's organ, shrill and sound,
And all is semblative a woman's part.
I know thy constellation is right apt
For this affair. Some four or five attend him;
All, if you will; for I myself am best
When least in company. Prosper well in this,

And thou shalt live as freely as thy lord
To call his fortunes thine.

Viola. I'll do my best 40
To woo your lady :—[Aside] yet, a barful strife!
Whoe'er I woo, myself would be his wife. ✓ [Exeunt.

SCENE V. OLIVIA'S house.

Enter MARIA and Clown.

Maria. Nay, either tell me where thou hast been, or I will not open my lips so wide as a bristle may enter, in way of thy excuse: my lady will hang thee for thy absence.

Clown. Let her hang me: he that is well hanged in this world needs to fear no colours.

Maria. Make that good.

Clown. He shal see none to fear.

Maria. A good lenten answer: I can tell thee where that saying was born, of "I fear no colours."

Clown. Where, good Mistress Mary? 11

Maria. In the wars; and that may you be bold to say in your foolery.

Clown. Well, God give them wisdom that have it; and those that are fools, let them use their talents.

Maria. Yet you will be hanged for being so long absent; or, to be turned away,—is not that as good as a hanging to you? 19

Clown. Many a good hanging prevents a bad marriage; and, for turning away, let summer bear it out.

Maria. You are resolute, then?

Clown. Not so, neither; but I am resolved on two points.

Maria. That if one break, the other will hold; or, if both break, your gaskins fall.

Clown. Apt, in good faith; very apt. Well, go thy way; if Sir Toby would leave drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Eve's flesh as any in Illyria. 31

Maria. Peace, you rogue, no more o' that. Here comes my lady: make your excuse wisely, you were best. [Exit.]

Clown. Wit, an't be thy will, put me into good fooling! Those wits, that think they have thee, do very oft prove fools; and I, that am sure I lack thee, may pass for a wise man: for what says Quinapalus? "Better a witty fool than a foolish wit." 40

Enter OLIVIA and MALVOLIO.

God bless thee, lady!

Olivia. Take the fool away.

Clown. Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the lady.

Olivia. Go to, you're a dry fool; I'll no more of you: besides, you grow dishonest.

Clown. Two faults, madonna, that drink and good counsel will amend: for give the dry fool drink, then is the fool not dry: bid the dishonest man mend himself; if he mend, he is no longer dishonest; if he cannot, let the botcher mend him: any thing that's mended is but patched: virtue that transgresses is but patched with sin; and sin that amends is but patched with virtue: if that this simple syllogism will serve, so; if it will not, what remedy? The lady bade take away the fool; therefore, I say again, take her away.

Olivia. Sir, I bade them take away you. 60

Clown. Misprision in the highest degree! Lady, cucullus non facit monachum; that's as much to say as I wear not motley in my brain. Good madonna, give me leave to prove you a fool.

Olivia. Can you do it?

Clown. Dexterously, good madonna.

Olivia. Make your proof.

Clown. I must catechize you for it, madonna: good my mouse of virtue, answer me.

Olivia. Well, sir, for want of other idleness, I'll bide your proof. 71

Clown. Good madonna, why mournest thou?

Olivia. Good fool, for my brother's death.

Clown. I think his soul is in hell, madonna.

Olivia. I know his soul is in heaven, fool.

Clown. The more fool, madonna, to mourn for your brother's soul being in heaven.—Take away the fool, gentlemen.

Olivia. What think you of this fool, Malvolio? doth he not mend? 80

Malvolio. Yes, and shall do till the pangs of death shake him: infirmity, that decays the wise, doth ever make the better fool.

Clown. God send you, sir, a speedy infirmity, for the better increasing your folly! Sir Toby will be sworn that I am no fox; but he will not pass his word for twopence that you are no fool.

Olivia. How say you to that, Malvolio?

Malvolio. I marvel your ladyship takes delight in such a barren rascal: I saw him put down the other day with an ordinary fool that has no more brain than a stone. Look you now, he's out of his guard already; unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagged. I protest, I take these wise men, that crow so at these set kind of fools, no better than the fools' zanies.

Olivia. O, you are sick of self-love, Malvolio, and taste with a distempered appetite. To be generous, guiltless, and of free disposition, is to take those things for bird-bolts that you deem cannon-bullets: there is no slander in an allowed fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known discreet man, although he do nothing but reprove.

Clown. Now Mercury endue thee with leasing, for thou speakest well of fools!

Re-enter MARIA.

Maria. Madam, there is 'at the gate a young gentleman much desires to speak with you.

Olivia. From the Count Orsino, is it?

Maria. I know not, madam: 'tis a fair young man, and well attended.

III

Olivia. Who of my people hold him in delay?

Maria. Sir Toby, madam, your kinsman.

Olivia. Fetch him off, I pray you; he speaks nothing but madman: fie on him! [Exit Maria.] Go you, Malvolio: if it be a suit from the count, I am sick, or not at home; what you will, to dismiss it. [Exit Malvolio.] Now you see, sir, how your fooling grows old, and people dislike it.

Clown. Thou hast spoke for us, madonna, as if thy eldest son should be a fool,—whose skull Jove cram with brains! for here he comes, one of thy kin, has a most weak pia mater.

Enter Sir TOBY.

Olivia. By mine honour, half drunk.—What is he at the gate, cousin?

Sir Toby. A gentleman.

Olivia. A gentleman ! what gentleman ?

Sir Toby. 'Tis a gentleman here—a plague o' these pickle-herring ! How now, sot !

Clown. Good Sir Toby !

130

Olivia. Cousin, cousin, how have you come so early by this lethargy ?—

Sir Toby. There's one at the gate.

Olivia. Ay, marry, what is he ?

Sir Toby. Let him be the devil, an he will, I care not : give me faith, say I. Well, it's all one. [Exit.

Olivia. What's a drunken man like, fool ?

Clown. Like a drowned man, a fool, and a madman : one draught above heat makes him a fool ; the second mads him ; and a third drowns him.

141

Olivia. Go thou and seek the crowner, and let him sit o' my coz ; for he's in the third degree of drink,—he's drowned : go, look after him.

Clown. He is but mad yet, madonna ; and the fool shall look to the madman.

[Exit.

Re-enter MALVOLIO.

Malvolio. Madam, yond young fellow swears he will speak with you. I told him you were sick ; he takes on him to understand so much, and therefore comes to speak with you : I told him you were asleep ; he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore comes to speak with you. What is to be said to him, lady ? he's fortified against any denial.

Olivia. Tell him he shall not speak with me.

Malvolio. He has been told so ; and he says, he'll stand at your door like a sheriff's post, and be the supporter to a bench, but he'll speak with you.

Olivia. What kind o' man is he ?

Malvolio. Why, of mankind.

160

Olivia. What manner of man?

Malvolio. Of very ill manner; he'll speak with you, will you or no.

Olivia. Of what personage and years is he?

Malvolio. Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before 'tis a peascod, or a codling when 'tis almost an apple: 'tis with him in standing water, between boy and man. He is very well-favoured, and he speaks very shrewishly; one would think his mother's milk were scarce out of him.

171

Olivia. Let him approach: call in my gentlewoman.

Malvolio. Gentlewoman, my lady calls. [Exit.

Re-enter MARIA.

Olivia. Give me my veil: come, throw it o'er my face. We'll once more hear Orsino's embassy.

Enter VIOLA.

Viola. The honourable lady of the house, which is she?

Olivia. Speak to me; I shall answer for her. Your will?

Viola. Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty,—I pray you, tell me if this be the lady of the house, for I never saw her: I would be loth to cast away my speech; for, besides that it is excellently well penned, I have taken great pains to con it. Good beauties, let me sustain no scorn; I am very comptible, even to the least sinister usage.

Olivia. Whence came you, sir?

189

Viola. I can say little more than I have studied, and that question's out of my part. Good gentle one, give me modest assurance if you be the lady of the house, that I may proceed in my speech.

Olivia. Are you a comedian?

Viola. No, my profound heart: and yet, by the very fangs of malice I swear I am not that I play. Are you the lady of the house?

Olivia. If I do not usurp myself, I am.

Viola. Most certain, if you are she, you do usurp yourself; for what is yours to bestow is not yours to reserve. But this is from my commission: I will on with my speech in your praise, and then show you the heart of my message.

Olivia. Come to what is important in't: I forgive you the praise.

Viola. Alas, I took great pains to study it, and 'tis poetical.

Olivia. It is the more like to be feigned: I pray you, keep it in. I heard you were saucy at my gates; and allowed your approach rather to wonder at you than to hear you. If you be not mad, be gone; if you have reason, be brief: 'tis not that time of moon with me to make one in so skipping a dialogue.

Maria. Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.

Viola. No, good swabber; I am to hull here a little longer.—Some mollification for your giant, sweet lady. Tell me your mind: I am a messenger. 220

Olivia. Sure, you have some hideous matter to deliver, when the courtesy of it is so fearful. Speak your office.

Viola. It alone concerns your ear. I bring no overture of war, no taxation of homage: I hold the olive in my hand; my words are as full of peace as matter.

Olivia. Yet you began rudely. What are you? what would you? 229

Viola. The rudeness that hath appeared in me have I learned from my entertainment. What I am, and what I would, are secret: to your ears, divinity; to any other's, profanation.

Olivia. Give us the place alone: we will hear this divinity. [Exit Maria.] Now, sir, what is your text?

Viola. Most sweet lady,—

Olivia. A comfortable doctrine, and much may be said of it. Where lies your text? 240

Viola. In Orsino's bosom.

Olivia. In his bosom! In what chapter of his bosom?

Viola. To answer by the method, in the first of his heart.

Olivia. O, I have read it: it is heresy. Have you no more to say?

Viola. Good madam, let me see your face.

Olivia. Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? You are now out of your text: but we will draw the curtain, and show you the picture. Look you, sir, such a one I was this present: is't not well done? [Unveiling.]

Viola. Excellently done, if God did all.

Olivia. 'Tis in grain, sir; 'twill endure wind and weather.

Viola. 'Tis beauty truly blent, whose red and white Nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid on: Lady, you are the cruell'st she alive, If you will lead these graces to the grave 260 And leave the world no copy.

Olivia. O, sir, I will not be so hard-hearted; I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil labelled to my will:—as, item, two lips, indifferent red; item, two gray eyes, with lids to them; item, one neck, one chin, and so forth. Were you sent hither to praise me?

Viola. I see you what you are,—you are too proud; But, if you were the devil, you are fair. 270

My lord and master loves you: O, such love
 Could be but recompens'd, though you were crown'd
 The nonpareil of beauty!

Olivia. How does he love me?

Viola. With adorations, fertile tears,
 With groans that thunder love, with sighs of fire.

Oli. Your lord does know my mind; I cannot love him:
 Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
 Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth;
 In voices well divulg'd, free, learn'd, and valiant;
 And in dimension and the shape of nature 280
 A gracious person: but yet I cannot love him;
 He might have took his answer long ago.

Viola. If I did love you in my master's flame,
 With such a suffering, such a deadly life,
 In your denial I would find no sense;
 I would not understand it.

Olivia. Why, what would you?

Viola. Make me a willow cabin at your gate,
 And call upon my soul within the house;
 Write loyal cantons of contemned love,
 And sing them loud even in the dead of night;
 Holla your name to the reverberate hills, 291
 And make the babbling gossip of the air
 Cry out, "Olivia!" O, you should not rest Between the elements of air and earth,
 But you should pity me!

Olivia. You might do much. What is your parentage?

Viola. Above my fortunes, yet my state is well:
 I am a gentleman.

Olivia. Get you to your lord;
 I cannot love him: let him send no more;
 Unless, perchance, you come to me again,

To tell me how he takes it. Fare you well:
I thank you for your pains: spend this for me.

Viola. I am no fee'd post, lady; keep your purse:
My master, not myself, lacks recompense.
Love make his heart of flint that you shall love;
And let your fervour, like my master's, be Plac'd in contempt! Farewell, fair cruelty. [Exit.]

Olivia. "What is your parentage?"
"Above my fortunes, yet my state is well:
I am a gentleman." I'll be sworn thou art; 310
Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions, and spirit,
Do give thee fivefold blazon: not too fast: soft, soft!
Unless the master were the man! How now?
Even so quickly may one catch the plague?
Methinks I feel this youth's perfections
With an invisible and subtle stealth
To creep in at mine eyes. Well, let it be.—
What, ho, Malvolio!

Re-enter MALVOLIO.

Malvolio. Here, madam, at your service.

Olivia. Run after that same peevish messenger,
The county's man: he left this ring behind him,
Would I or not: tell him I'll none of it. 321
Desire him not to flatter with his lord,
Nor hold him up with hopes; I am not for him:
If that the youth will come this way to-morrow,
I'll give him reasons for't. Hie thee, Malvolio.

Malvolio. Madam, I will. [Exit.]

Olivia. I do I know not what; and fear to find Mine eye too great a flatterer for my mind.
Fate, show thy force: ourselves we do not owe;
What is decreed must be,—and be this so! [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. The sea-coast.

Enter ANTONIO and SEBASTIAN.

Antonio. Will you stay no longer? nor will you not that I go with you?

Sebastian. By your patience, no. My stars shine darkly over me: the malignancy of my fate might perhaps distemper yours; therefore I shall crave of you your leave that I may bear my evils alone: it were a bad recompense for your love, to lay any of them on you.

Antonio. Let me yet know of you whither you are bound. 10

Sebastian. No, sooth, sir: my determinate voyage is mere extravagancy. But I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty, that you will not extort from me what I am willing to keep in; therefore it charges me in manners the rather to express myself. You must know of me, then, Antonio, my name is Sebastian, which I called Roderigo. My father was that Sebastian of Messaline, whom I know you have heard of. He left behind him myself and a sister, both born in an hour: if the heavens had been pleased, would we had so ended! but you, sir, altered that; for some hour before you took me from the breach of the sea was my sister drowned.

Antonio. Alas the day!

25

Sebastian. A lady, sir, though it was said she much resembled me, was yet of many accounted beautiful: but, though I could not with such estimable wonder overfar believe that, yet thus far I will boldly publish her,—she bore a mind that envy could not but call fair. She is drowned already, sir, with salt water, though I seem to drown her remembrance again with more.

Antonio. Pardon me, sir, your bad entertainment. 34

Sebastian. O good Antonio, forgive me your trouble!

Antonio. If you will not murder me for my love, let me be your servant.

Sebastian. If you will not undo what you have done, that is, kill him whom you have recovered, desire it not. Fare ye well at once: my bosom is full of kindness; and I am yet so near the manners of my mother, that, upon the least occasion more, mine eyes will tell tales of me. I am bound to the Count Orsino's court: farewell.

[Exit.

Antonio. The gentleness of all the gods go with thee! I have many enemies in Orsino's court, Else would I very shortly see thee there: But, come what may, I do adore thee so, That danger shall seem sport, and I will go. [Exit. 49]

SCENE II. A street.

Enter VIOLA, MALVOLIO following.

Malvolio. Were not you even now with the Countess Olivia?

Viola. Even now, sir; on a moderate pace I have since arrived but hither.

Malvolio. She returns this ring to you, sir: you might have saved me my pains, to have taken it away yourself. She adds, moreover, that you should put your lord into a desperate assurance she will none of him: and one thing more, that you be never so hardy to come again in his affairs, unless it be to report your lord's taking of this. Receive it so.

12

Viola. She took the ring of me: I'll none of it.

Malvolio. Come, sir, you peevishly threw it to her; and her will is, it should be so returned: if it be worth stooping for, there it lies in your eye; if not, be it his that finds it.

[Exit.]

Viola. I left no ring with her: what means this lady? Fortune forbid my outside have not charm'd her!

She made good view of me; indeed, so much, 20
That sure methought her eyes had lost her tongue,
For she did speak in starts distractedly.

She loves me, sure; the cunning of her passion
Invites me in this churlish messenger.

None of my lord's ring! why, he sent her none.

I am the man: if it be so,—as 'tis,—

Poor lady, she were better love a dream.

Disguise, I see, thou art a wickedness,
Wherein the pregnant enemy does much.

How easy is it for the proper-false

30

In women's waxen hearts to set their forms!

Alas, our frailty is the cause, not we!

For such as we are made of, such we be.

How will this fadge? my master loves her dearly;

And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;

And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me.

What will become of this? As I am man,

My state is desperate for my master's love;

As I am woman,—now, alas the day!—

What thrifless sighs shall poor Olivia breathe!

40

O Time, thou must untangle this, not I;

It is too hard a knot for me to untie!

[Exit.]

SCENE III. OLIVIA'S house.

Enter Sir Toby and Sir Andrew.

Sir Toby. Approach, Sir Andrew: not to be a-bed after midnight is to be up betimes; and diluculo surgere, thou know'st,— Sir Andrew. Nay, by my troth, I know not: but I know, to be up late is to be up late.

Sir Toby. A false conclusion: I hate it as an unfilled can. To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early: so that, to go to bed after midnight is to go to bed betimes. Does not our life consist of the four elements? 10

Sir Andrew. Faith, so they say; but I think it rather consists of eating and drinking.

Sir Toby. Thou'rt a scholar: let us therefore eat and drink.—Marian, I say! a stoup of wine!

Sir Andrew. Here comes the fool, i' faith.

Enter Clown.

Clown. How now, my hearts! did you never see the picture of "We Three"?

Sir Toby. Welcome, ass. Now let's have a catch.

Sir Andrew. By my troth, the fool has an excellent breast. I had rather than forty shillings I had such a leg, and so sweet a breath to sing, as the fool has. In sooth, thou wast in very gracious fooling last night, when thou spokest of Pigromonitus, of the Vapians passing the equinoctial of Queubus: 'twas very good, i' faith. I sent thee sixpence for thy leman: hadst it?

Clown. I did impetuos thy gratillity; for Malvolio's nose is no whipstock: my lady has a white hand, and the Myrmidons are no bottle-ale houses. 29

Sir Andrew. Excellent! why, this is the best fooling, when all is done. Now, a song.

Sir Toby. Come on; there is sixpence for you: let's have a song.

Sir Andrew. There's a testril of me too: if one knight give a—

Clown. Would you have a love-song, or a song of good life?

Sir Toby. A love-song, a love-song.

Sir Andrew. Ay, ay: I care not for good life.

Song.

Clown. O mistress mine, where are you roaming? 40
 O, stay and hear; your true love's coming,
 That can sing both high and low:
 Trip no further, pretty sweeting;
 Journeys end in lovers meeting,
 Every wise man's son doth know.

Sir And. Excellent good, i' faith.

Sir Toby. Good, good.

Clown. What is love? 'tis not hereafter;
 Present mirth hath present laughter;
 What's to come is still unsure: 50
 In delay there lies no plenty;
 Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty,
 Youth's a stuff will not endure.

Sir Andrew. A mellifluous voice, as I am true knight.

Sir Toby. A contagious breath.

Sir Andrew. Very sweet and contagious, i' faith.

Sir Toby. To hear by the nose, it is dulcet in contagion. But shall we make the welkin dance indeed?

shall we rouse the night-owl in a catch that will draw three souls out of one weaver? shall we do that?

Sir Andrew. An you love me, let's do't: I am dog at a catch.

Clown. By'r lady, sir, and some dogs will catch well.

Sir Andrew. Most certain. Let our catch be, "Thou knave."

Clown. "Hold thy peace, thou knave," knight? I shall be constrained in't to call thee knave, knight. 70

Sir Andrew. 'Tis not the first time I have constrained one to call me knave. Begin, fool: it begins, "Hold thy peace."

Clown. I shall never begin, if I hold my peace.

Sir Andrew. Good, i' faith. Come, begin.

[They sing the catch.]

Enter MARIA.

Maria. What a caterwauling do you keep here! If my lady have not called up her steward Malvolio and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me. 79

Sir Toby. My lady's a Cataian, we are politicians, Malvolio's a Peg-a-Ramsey, and "Three merry men be we." Am not I consanguineous? am I not of her blood? Tilly-vally, lady! [Sings.] "There dwelt a man in Babylon, lady, lady!"

Clown. Beshrew me, the knight's in admirable fooling.

Sir Andrew. Ay, he does well enough if he be disposed, and so do I too: he does it with a better grace, but I do it more natural.

Sir Toby. [Sings.] "O, the twelfth day of December,"—

Maria. For the love o' God, peace!

Enter MALVOLIO.

Malvolio. My masters, are you mad? or what are you? Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do you make an ale-house of my lady's house, that ye squeak out your coziers' catches without any mitigation or remorse of voice? Is there no respect of place, persons, nor time, in you?

Sir Toby. We did keep time, sir, in our catches. Sneck up! 101

Malvolio. Sir Toby, I must be round with you. My lady bade me tell you, that, though she harbours you as her kinsman, she's nothing allied to your disorders. If you can separate yourself and your misdemeanours, you are welcome to the house; if not, an it would please you to take leave of her, she is very willing to bid you farewell.

Sir Toby. "Farewell, dear heart, since I must needs be gone." 110

Maria. Nay, good Sir Toby.

Clown. "His eyes do show his days are almost done."

Malvolio. Is't even so?

Sir Toby. "But I will never die."

Clown. Sir Toby, there you lie.

Malvolio. This is much credit to you.

Sir Toby. "Shall I bid him go?"

Clown. "What an if you do?"

Sir Toby. "Shall I bid him go, and spare not?"

Clown. "O, no, no, no, no, you dare not." 121

Sir Toby. Out o' tune, sir? ye lie.—Art any more than a steward? Dost thou think, because thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale?

Clown. Yes, by Saint Anne; and ginger shall be hot i' the mouth too.

Sir Toby. Thou'rt i' the right.—Go, sir, rub your chain with crumbs.—A stoup of wine, Maria!

Malvolio. Mistress Mary, if you prized my lady's favour at any thing more than contempt, you would not give means for this uncivil rule: she shall know of it, by this hand. [Exit.]

Maria. Go shake your ears.

Sir Andrew. 'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him the field, and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him.

Sir Toby. Do't, knight: I'll write thee a challenge; or I'll deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.

Maria. Sweet Sir Toby, be patient for to-night: since the youth of the count's was to-day with my lady, she is much out of quiet. For Monsieur Malvolio, let me alone with him: if I do not gull him into a nayword, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed: I know I can do it.

Sir Toby. Possess us, possess us; tell us something of him. 150

Maria. Marry, sir, sometimes he is a kind of puritan.

Sir Andrew. O, if I thought that, I'd beat him like a dog!

Sir Toby. What, for being a puritan? thy exquisite reason, dear knight?

Sir Andrew. I have no exquisite reason for't, but I have reason good enough.

Maria. The devil a puritan that he is, or any thing constantly, but a time-pleaser; an affectioned ass, that cons state without book, and utters it by great swarths: the best persuaded of himself, so crammed, as he thinks, with excellencies, that it is his grounds of faith that all that look on him love him; and on that vice in him will my revenge find notable cause to work. 166

Sir Toby. What wilt thou do?

Maria. I will drop in his way some obscure epistles of love; wherein, by the colour of his beard, the shape of his leg, the manner of his gait, the expressure of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself most feelingly personated: I can write very like my lady, your niece; on a forgotten matter we can hardly make distinction of our hands.

Sir Toby. Excellent! I smell a device.

Sir Andrew. I have't in my nose too.

Sir Toby. He shall think, by the letters that thou wilt drop, that they come from my niece, and that she's in love with him. 180

Maria. My purpose is, indeed, a horse of that colour.

Sir Andrew. And your horse now would make him an ass.

Maria. Ass, I doubt not.

Sir Andrew. O, 'twill be admirable!

Maria. Sport royal, I warrant you: I know my physic will work with him. I will plant you two, and let the fool make a third, where he shall find the letter: observe his construction of it. For this night, to bed, and dream on the event. Farewell. [Exit.

Sir Toby. Good night, Penthesilea.

Sir Andrew. Before me, she's a good wench.

Sir Toby. She's a beagle, true-bred, and one that adores me: what o' that?

Sir Andrew. I was adored once too.

Sir Toby. Let's to bed, knight.—Thou hadst need send for more money.

Sir Andrew. If I cannot recover your niece, I am a foul way out. 201

Sir Toby. Send for money, knight: if thou hast her not i' the end, call me cut.

Sir Andrew. If I do not, never trust me, take it how you will.

Sir Toby. Come, come; I'll go burn some sack; 'tis too late to go to bed now: come, knight; come, knight.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The Duke's Palace.

Enter Duke, VIOLA, CURIO, and others.

Duke. Give me some music. Now, good morrow, friends.

Now, good Cesario, but that piece of song,
That old and antique song we heard last night:
Methought it did relieve my passion much,
More than light airs and recollect terms
Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times:
Come, but one verse.

Curio. He is not here, so please your lordship, that should sing it.

Duke. Who was it? 10

Curio. Feste, the jester, my lord; a fool that the lady Olivia's father took much delight in: he is about the house.

Duke. Seek him out, and play the tune the while.

[Exit Curio. Music.]

Come hither, boy: if ever thou shalt love,
. In the sweet pangs of it remember me;
For such as I am all true lovers are,— Unstaid and skittish in all motions else,

Save in the constant image of the creature
That is belov'd. How dost thou like this tune? 20

Viola. It gives a very echo to the seat
Where Love is thron'd.

Duke. Thou dost speak masterly:
My life upon't, young though thou art, thine eye
Hath stay'd upon some favour that it loves;
Hath it not, boy?

Viola. A little, by your favour.

Duke. What kind of woman is't?

Viola. Of your complexion.

Duke. She is not worth thee, then. What years, i' faith?

Viola. About your years, my lord.

Duke. Too old, by heaven: let still the woman take
An elder than herself; so wears she to him, 31
So sways she level in her husband's heart:
For, boy, however we do praise ourselves,
Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm,
More longing, wavering, sooner lost and worn,
Than women's are.

Viola. I think it well, my lord.

Duke. Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent;
For women are as roses, whose fair flower,
Being once display'd, doth fall that very hour. 40

Viola. And so they are: alas, that they are so;
To die, even when they to perfection grow!

Re-enter CURIO with Clown.

Duke. O, fellow, come, the song we had last night.
Mark it, Cesario; it is old and plain:
The spinsters and the knitters in the sun,

And the free maids that weave their thread with bones,
 Do use to chant it: it is silly sooth,
 And dallies with the innocence of love,
 Like the old age.

Clown. Are you ready, sir?

50

Duke. Ay; prithee, sing.

[Music.]

Song.

Clo. Come away, come away, death,
 And in sad cypress let me be laid;
 Fly away, fly away, breath;
 I am slain by a fair cruel maid.
 My shroud of white, stuck all with yew,
 O, prepare it!
 My part of death, no one so true
 Did share it.
 Not a flower, not a flower sweet, 60
 On my black coffin let there be strown;
 Not a friend, not a friend greet
 My poor corpse, where my bones shall be thrown:
 A thousand thousand sighs to save,
 Lay me, O, where
 Sad true lover never find my grave,
 To weep there!

Duke. There's for thy pains.

Clown. No pains, sir; I take pleasure in singing, sir.

Duke. I'll pay thy pleasure, then. 71

Clown. Truly, sir, and pleasure will be paid, one time or another.

Duke. Give me now leave to leave thee.

Clown. Now, the melancholy god protect thee: and the tailor make thy doublet of changeable taffeta, for thy mind is a very opal! I would have men of such constancy put to sea, that their business might be every thing, and their intent every where; for that's it that always makes a good voyage of nothing. Farewell. [Exit. 81]

Duke. Let all the rest give place.

[Curio and Attendants retire.

Once more, Cesario,

Get thee to yond same sovereign cruelty :
Tell her, my love, more noble than the world,
Prizes not quantity of dirty lands ;
The parts that fortune hath bestow'd upon her,
Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune ;
But 'tis that miracle and queen of gems
That nature pranks her in attracts my soul.

Viola. But if she cannot love you, sir? 90

Duke. I cannot be so answer'd.

Viola. Sooth, but you must.

Say that some lady—as, perhaps, there is—
Hath for your love as great a pang of heart
As you have for Olivia: you cannot love her ;
You tell her so ; must she not, then, be answer'd ?

Duke. There is no woman's sides
Can bide the beating of so strong a passion
As love doth give my heart ; no woman's heart
So big, to hold so much ; they lack retention.

Alas, their love may be call'd appetite,—
No motion of the liver, but the palate,—
That suffer surfeit, cloyment, and revolt ;
But mine is all as hungry as the sea,
And can digest as much : make no compare
Between that love a woman can bear me
And that I owe Olivia.

Viola. Ay, but I know,—

Duke. What dost thou know ?

Viola. Too well what love women to men may owe:
 In faith, they are as true of heart as we.
 My father had a daughter lov'd a man,
 As it might be, perhaps, were I a woman,
 I should your lordship.

Duke. And what's her history?

Viola. A blank, my lord. She never told her love,
 But let concealment, like a worm i' the bud,
 Feed on her damask cheek: she pin'd in thought;
 And with a green and yellow melancholy
 She sat like Patience on a monument,
 Smiling at grief. Was not this love indeed?
 We men may say more, swear more: but, indeed,
 Our shows are more than will; for still we prove 120
 Much in our vows, but little in our love.

Duke. But died thy sister of her love, my boy?

Viola. I am all the daughters of my father's house,
 And all the brothers too;—and yet I know not.
 Sir, shall I to this lady?

Duke. Ay, that's the theme.

To her in haste; give her this jewel; say,
 My love can give no place, bide no denay.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V. OLIVIA'S garden.

Enter Sir TOBY, Sir ANDREW, and FABIAN.

Sir Toby. Come thy ways, Signior Fabian.

Fabian. Nay, I'll come: if I lose a scruple of this sport, let me be boiled to death with melancholy.

Sir Toby. Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally sheep-biter come by some notable shame?

Fabian. I would exult, man: you know he brought me out o' favour with my lady about a bear-baiting here.

Sir Toby. To anger him, we'll have the bear again; and we will fool him black and blue:—shall we not, Sir Andrew?

13

Sir Andrew. An we do not, it is pity of our lives.

Sir Toby. Here comes the little villain.

Enter MARIA.

How now, my metal of India!

Maria. Get ye all three into the box-tree: Malvolio's coming down this walk: he has been yonder i' the sun practising behaviour to his own shadow this half hour: observe him, for the love of mockery; for I know this letter will make a contemplative idiot of him. Close, in the name of jesting! Lie thou there [Throws down a letter]; for here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling.

[Exit.]

Enter MALVOLIO.

Malvolio. 'Tis but fortune; all is fortune. Maria once told me she did affect me: and I have heard herself come thus near, that, should she fancy, it should be one of my complexion. Besides, she uses me with a more exalted respect than any one else that follows her. What should I think on't?

Sir Toby. Here's an overweening rogue!

Fabian. O, peace! Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes!

Sir Andrew. 'Slight, I could so beat the rogue!

Sir Toby. Peace, I say.

Malvolio. To be Count Malvolio,— 40

Sir Toby. Ah, rogue!

Sir Andrew. Pistol him, pistol him.

Sir Toby. Peace, peace!

Malvolio. There is example for't; the lady of the Strachy married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

Sir Andrew. Fie on him, Jezebel!

Fabian. O, peace! now he's deeply in: look how imagination blows him.

Malvolio. Having been three months married to her, sitting in my state,—

50

Sir Toby. O for a stone-bow, to hit him in the eye!

Malvolio. Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown; having come from Olivia,—

Sir Toby. Fire and brimstone!

Fabian. O, peace, peace!

Malvolio. And then to have the humour of state; and after a demure travel of regard, telling them I know my place, as I would they should do theirs, to ask for my kinsman Toby,—

61

Sir Toby. Bolts and shackles!

Fabian. O, peace, peace, peace! now, now.

Malvolio. Seven of my people, with an obedient start, make out for him: I frown the while; and perchance wind up my watch, or play with my—some rich jewel
Toby approaches; courtesies there to me,—

Sir Toby. Shall this fellow live?

Fabian. Though our silence be drawn from us with cars, yet peace.

71

Malvolio. I extend my hand to him thus, quenching my familiar smile with an austere regard of control,—

Sir Toby. And does not Toby take you a blow o' the lips, then?

Malvolio. Saying, "Cousin Toby, my fortunes having cast me on your niece, give me this prerogative of speech,"—

Sir Toby. What, what?

80

Malvolio. "You must amend your drunkenness."

Sir Toby. Out, scab!

Fabian. Nay, patience, or we break the sinews of our plot.

Malvolio. "Besides, you waste the treasure of your time with a foolish knight,"—

Sir Andrew. That's me, I warrant you.

Malvolio. "One Sir Andrew,"—

Sir Andrew. I knew 'twas I; for many do call me fool.

90

Malvolio. What employment have we here?

[Taking up the letter.

Fabian. Now is the woodcock near the gin.

Sir Toby. O, peace! and the spirit of humours intimate reading aloud to him!

Malvolio. By my life, this is my lady's hand: these be her very C's, her U's, and her T's; and thus makes she her great P's. It is, in contempt of question, her hand.

Sir Andrew. Her C's, her U's, and her T's: why that?

100

Malvolio. [Reads] "To the unknown beloved, this, and my good wishes :" her very phrases!—By your leave, wax.—Soft! and the impressure her Lucrece, with which she uses to seal: 'tis my lady. To whom should this be?

Fabian. This wins him, liver and all.

Mal. [Reads] "Jove knows I love:

But who?

Lips, do not move;

No man must know."

110

"No man must know."—What follows? the numbers altered!—"No man must know:"—if this should be thee, Malvolio?

Sir Toby. Marry, hang thee, brock!

Malvolio. [Reads]

"I may command where I adore;

But silence, like a Lucrece knife,

With bloodless stroke my heart doth gore:

M, O, A, I, doth sway my life."

Fabian. A fustian riddle!

Sir Toby. Excellent wench, say I.

Malvolio. "M, O, A, I, doth sway my life."—Nay, but first, let me see, let me see, let me see.

Fabian. What dish o' poison has she dressed him!

Sir Toby. And with what wing the staniel checks at it!

Malvolio. "I may command where I adore." Why, she may command me: I serve her; she is my lady. Why, this is evident to any formal capacity; there is no obstruction in this: and the end,—what should that alphabetical position portend? if I could make that resemble something in me,—Softly! M, O, A, I,—

Sir Toby. O, ay, make up that: he is now at a cold scent.

Fabian. Sowter will cry upon't, for all this, though it be as rank as a fox.

Malvolio. M,—Malvolio; M,—why, that begins my name.

Fabian. Did not I say he would work it out? the cur is excellent at faults.

Malvolio. M,—but then there is no consonancy in the sequel; that suffers under probation: A should follow, but O does.

Fabian. And O shall end, I hope.

Sir Toby. Ay, or I'll cudgel him, and make him cry O!
Malvolio. And then I comes behind.

Fabian. Ay, an you had any eye behind you, you might see more detraction at your heels than fortunes before you.

150

Malvolio. M, O, A, I; this simulation is not as the former: and yet, to crush this a little, it would bow to me, for every one of these letters are in my name. Soft! here follows prose.

[Reads] "If this fall into thy hand, revolve. In my stars I am above thee; but be not afraid of greatness: some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon 'em. Thy Fates open their hands; let thy blood and spirit embrace them: and, to inure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough and appear fresh. Be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants; let thy tongue tang arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity; she thus advises thee that sighs for thee. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings, and wished to see thee ever cross-gartered: I say, remember. Go to, thou art made, if thou desirest to be so; if not, let me see thee a steward still, the fellow of servants, and not worthy to touch Fortune's fingers. Farewell. She that would alter services with thee,

THE FORTUNATE-UNHAPPY."

Daylight and champain discovers not more: this is open. I will be proud, I will read politic authors, I will baffle Sir Toby, I will wash off gross acquaintance, I will be point-devise the very man. I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me; for every reason excites to this, that my lady loves me. She did commend my yellow stockings of late, she did praise my leg being cross-gartered; and in this she manifests herself to my love, and with a kind of injunction drives me to these habits of her liking. I thank my stars, I am happy. I will be strange, stout, in yellow stockings, and cross-gartered, even with the swiftness of putting on. Jove and my stars be praised! Here is yet a postscript.

[Reads] "Thou canst not choose but know who I am. If thou entertainest my love, let it appear in thy smiling: thy smiles become thee well; therefore in my presence still smile, dear my sweet, I prithee."

Jove, I thank thee: I will smile; I will do every thing that thou wilt have me. [Exit.]

Fabian. I will not give my part of this sport for a pension of thousands to be paid from the Sophy.

Sir Toby. I could marry this wench for this device.

Sir Andrew. So could I too.

200

Sir Toby. And ask no other dowry with her but such another jest.

Sir Andrew. Nor I neither.

Fabian. Here comes my noble gull-catcher.

Re-enter MARIA.

Sir Toby. Wilt thou set thy foot o' my neck?

Sir Andrew. Or o' mine either?

Sir Toby. Shall I play my freedom at tray-trip, and become thy bond-slave?

Sir Andrew. I' faith, or I either?

209

Sir Toby. Why, thou hast put him in such a dream, that, when the image of it leaves him, he must run mad.

Maria. Nay, but say true; does it work upon him?

Sir Toby. Like aqua-vitæ with a midwife.

Maria. If you will, then, see the fruits of the sport, mark his first approach before my lady: he will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis a colour she abhors, and cross-gartered, a fashion she detests; and he will smile upon her, which will now be so unsuitable to her disposition, being addicted to a melancholy as she is, that it cannot but turn him into a notable contempt. If you will see it, follow me.

Sir Toby. To the gates of Tartar, thou most excellent devil of wit!

Sir Andrew. I'll make one too.

[Exeunt. ✓

ACT III.

SCENE I. OLIVIA'S garden.

Enter VIOLA, and Clown with a tabor.

Viola. Save thee, friend, and thy music! dost thou live by thy tabor?

Clown. No, sir, I live by the church.

Viola. Art thou a churchman?

Clown. No such matter, sir: I do live by the church; for I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the church.

Viola. So thou mayst say, the king lies by a beggar, if a beggar dwell near him; or, the church stands by thy tabor, if thy tabor stand by the church. II

Clown. You have said, sir.—To see this age!—A sentence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit: how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward!

Viola. Nay, that's certain; they that dally nicely with words may quickly make them wanton.

Clown. I would, therefore, my sister had had no name, sir. 20

Viola. Why, man?

Clown. Why, sir, her name's a word. But indeed words are very rascals since bonds disgraced them.

Viola. Thy reason, man?

Clown. Troth, sir, I can yield you none without words; and words are grown so false, I am loth to prove reason with them.

Viola. I warrant thou art a merry fellow and carest for nothing. 31

Clown. Not so, sir; I do care for something; but in my conscience, sir, I do not care for you: if that be to care for nothing, sir, I would it would make you invisible.

Viola. Art not thou the Lady Olivia's fool?

Clown. No, indeed, sir; the Lady Olivia has no folly: she will keep no fool, sir, till she be married; and fools are as like husbands as pilchards are to herrings,—the husband's the bigger: I am, indeed, not her fool, but her corrupter of words.

Viola. I saw thee late at the Count Orsino's.

Clown. Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb like the sun, it shines everywhere. I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with my mistress: I think I saw your wisdom there.

Viola. Nay, an thou pass upon me, I'll no more with thee. Hold, there's expenses for thee.

Clown. Now Jove, in his next commodity of hair, send thee a beard! 51

Viola. By my troth, I'll tell thee, I am almost sick for one; [Aside] though I would not have it grow on my chin. Is thy lady within?

Clown. Would not a pair of these have bred, sir?

Viola. Yes, being put to use.

Clown. I would play Lord Pandarus of Phrygia, sir, to bring a Cressida to this Troilus.

Viola. I understand you, sir; 'tis well begged.

Clown. The matter, I hope, is not great, sir, begging but a beggar: Cressida was a beggar. My lady is within, sir. I will construe to them whence you come; who you are, and what you would, are out of my welkin,—I might say element, but the word is over-worn. [Exit.

Viola. This fellow's wise enough to play the fool; And to do that well craves a kind of wit: He must observe their mood on whom he jests, The quality of persons, and the time; And, like the haggard, check at every feather That comes before his eye. This is a practice As full of labour as a wise man's art: For folly that he wisely shows is fit; But wise men, folly-fall'n, quite taint their wit.

70

Enter Sir TOBY and Sir ANDREW.

Sir Toby. Save you, gentleman!

Viola. And you, sir.

Sir Andrew. Dieu vous garde, monsieur.

Viola. Et vous aussi; votre serviteur.

Sir Andrew. I hope, sir, you are; and I am yours. 81

Sir Toby. Will you encounter the house? my niece is desirous you should enter, if your trade be to her.

Viola. I am bound to your niece, sir; I mean, she is the list of my voyage.

Sir Toby. Taste your legs, sir; put them to motion.

Viola. My legs do better understand me, sir, than I understand what you mean by bidding me taste my legs.

Sir Toby. I mean; to go, sir, to enter. 92

Viola. I will answer you with gait and entrance:— but we are prevented.

Enter OLIVIA and MARIA.

Most excellent accomplished lady, the heavens rain odours on you!

Sir Andrew. That youth's a rare courtier: "Rain odours:"—well!

Viola. My matter hath no voice, iady, but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed ear. 100

Sir Andrew. "Odours," "pregnant," and "vouchsafed:"—I'll get 'em all three all ready.

Olivia. Let the garden-door be shut, and leave me to my hearing. [Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Maria.] Give me your hand, sir.

Viola. My duty, madam, and most humble service.

Olivia. What is your name?

Viola. Cesario is your servant's name, fair princess.

Olivia. My servant, sir! 'Twas never merry world
Since lowly feigning was call'd compliment: 110
You're servant to the Count Orsino, youth.

Viola. And he is yours, and his must needs be yours:
Your servant's servant is your servant, madam.

Olivia. For him, I think not on him: for his thoughts,
Would they were blanks, rather than fill'd with me!

Viola. Madam, I come to whet your gentle thoughts
On his behalf:—

Olivia. O, by your leave, I pray you;
I bade you never speak again of him:
But, would you undertake another suit,
I had rather hear you to solicit that 120
Than music from the spheres.

Viola.

Dear lady,—

Olivia. Give me leave, beseech you. I did send,
After the last enchantment you did here,
A ring in chase of you: so did I abuse
Myself, my servant, and, I fear me, you;
Under your hard construction must I sit,
To force that on you, in a shameful cunning,
Which you knew none of yours: what might you think?
Have you not set mine honour at the stake,
And baited it with all th' unmuzzled thoughts 130
That tyrannous heart can think? To one of your receiving Enough is shown: a cypress, not a bosom,
Hides my heart. So, let me hear you speak.

Viola. I pity you.Olivia. That's a degree to love.

Viola. No, not a grize; for 'tis a vulgar proof,
That very oft we pity enemies.

Olivia. Why, then, methinks 'tis time to smile again.
O world, how apt the poor are to be proud!
If one should be a prey, how much the better
To fall before the lion than the wolf! [Clock strikes. 140
The clock upbraids me with the waste of time.
Be not afraid, good youth, I will not have you:
And yet, when wit and youth is come to harvest,
Your wife is like to reap a proper man:
There lies your way, due west.

Viola.

Then westward-ho!

Grace and good disposition attend your ladyship!
You'll nothing, madam, to my lord by me?

Olivia. Stay:

I prithee, tell me what thou think'st of me. 150

Viola. That you do think you are not what you are.Olivia. If I think so, I think the same of you.

Viola. Then think you right: I am not what I am.

Olivia. I would you were as I would have you be!

Viola. Would it be better, madam, than I am?

I wish it might, for now I am your fool.

Olivia. O what a deal of scorn looks beautiful
In the contempt and anger of his lip!

A murderous guilt shows not itself more soon
Than love that would seem hid: love's night is noon.

Cesario, by the roses of the spring,

161

By maidhood, honour, truth, and every thing,

I love thee so, that, maugre all thy pride,

Nor wit nor reason can my passion hide.

Do not extort thy reasons from this clause,

For that I woo, thou therefore hast no cause;

But, rather, reason thus with reason fetter,—

Love sought is good, but given unsought is better.

Viola. By innocence I swear, and by my youth,

I have one heart, one bosom, and one truth,

170

And that no woman has; nor never none

Shall mistress be of it, save I alone.

And so adieu, good madam: never more

Will I my master's tears to you deplore.

Olivia. Yet come again; for thou perhaps mayst move
That heart, which now abhors, to like his love. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. OLIVIA'S house.

Enter Sir TOBY, Sir ANDREW, and FABIAN.

Sir Andrew. No, faith, I'll not stay a jot longer.

Sir Toby. Thy reason, dear venom; give thy reason.

Fabian. You must needs yield your reason, Sir Andrew.

Sir Andrew. Marry, I saw your niece do more favours to the count's serving-man than ever she bestowed upon me; I saw't i' the orchard.

Sir Toby. Did she see thee the while, old boy? tell me that. 10

Sir Andrew. As plain as I see you now.

Fabian. This was a great argument of love in her toward you.

Sir Andrew. 'Slight, will you make an ass o' me?

Fabian. I will prove it legitimate, sir, upon the oaths of judgment and reason.

Sir Toby. And they have been grand-jurymen since before Noah was a sailor.

Fabian. She did show favour to the youth in your sight only to exasperate you, to awake your dormouse valour, to put fire in your heart, and brimstone in your liver. You should then have accosted her; and with some excellent jests, fire-new from the mint, you should have banged the youth into dumbness. This was looked for at your hand, and this was balked: the double gilt of this opportunity you let time wash off, and you are now sailed into the north of my lady's opinion; where you will hang like an icicle on a Dutchman's beard, unless you do redeem it by some laudable attempt either of valour or policy. 31

Sir Andrew. An't be any way, it must be with valour; for policy I hate: I had as lief be a Brownist as a politician.

Sir Toby. Why, then, build me thy fortunes upon the basis of valour. Challenge me the count's youth to fight with him; hurt him in eleven places: my niece shall take note of it; and assure thyself, there is no love-broker in the world can more prevail in man's commendation with woman than report of valour. 41

Fabian. There is no way but this, Sir Andrew.

Sir Andrew. Will either of you bear me a challenge to him?

Sir Toby. Go, write it in a martial hand; be curst and brief; it is no matter how witty, so it be eloquent and full of invention: taunt him with the licence of ink: if thou "thou'st" him some thrice, it shall not be amiss; and as many lies as will lie in thy sheet of paper, although the sheet were big enough for the bed of Ware in England, set 'em down: go, about it. Let there be gall enough in thy ink; though thou write with a goosepen, no matter: about it.

Sir Andrew. Where shall I find you?

Sir Toby. We'll call thee at the cubiculo: go.

[Exit Sir Andrew.]

Fabian. This is a dear manakin to you, Sir Toby.

Sir Toby. I have been dear to him, lad,—some two thousand strong, or so.

Fabian. We shall have a rare letter from him: but you'll not deliver't? 61

Sir Toby. Never trust me, then; and by all means stir on the youth to an answer. I think oxen and wainropes cannot hale them together. For Andrew, if he were opened, and you find so much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy.

Fabian. And his opposite, the youth, bears in his visage no great presage of cruelty.

Sir Toby. Look, where the youngest wren of nine comes. 71

Enter MARIA.

Maria. If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourselves into stitches, follow me. Yond gull Malvolio is turned heathen, a very renegado; for there is no Christian, that means to be saved by believing rightly, can ever believe such impossible passages of grossness. He's in yellow stockings.

Sir Toby. And cross-gartered? 79

Maria. Most villainously; like a pedant that keeps a school i' the church. I have dogged him, like his murderer. He does obey every point of the letter that I dropped to betray him: he does smile his face into more lines than are in the new map with the augmentation of the Indies: you have not seen such a thing as 'tis; I can hardly forbear hurling things at him. I know my lady will strike him: if she do, he'll smile, and take't for a great favour.

Sir Toby. Come, bring us, bring us where he is. 90

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. A street.Enter SEBASTIAN and ANTONIO.

Sebastian. I would not by my will have troubled you; But, since you make your pleasure of your pains, I will no further chide you.

Antonio. I could not stay behind you: my desire, More sharp than filed steel, did spur me forth; And not all love to see you,—though so much As might have drawn one to a longer voyage,— But jealousy what might befall your travel,

Being skilless in these parts; which to a stranger,
 Unguided and unfriended, often prove
 Rough and unhospitable: my willing love,
 The rather by these arguments of fear,
 Set forth in your pursuit.

Sebastian. My kind Antonio,
 I can no other answer make, but thanks,
 And thanks, and ever thanks; and oft good turns
 Are shuffled off with such uncurrent pay:
 But, were my worth as is my conscience firm,
 You should find better dealing. What's to do?
 Shall we go see the reliques of this town?

Antonio. To-morrow, sir; best first go see your lodging.

Sebastian. I am not weary, and 'tis long to night: 21
 I pray you, let us satisfy our eyes
 With the memorials and the things of fame
 That do renown this city.

Antonio. Would you'd pardon me;
 I do not without danger walk these streets:
 Once, in a sea-fight, 'gainst the count his galleys
 I did some service; of such note, indeed,
 That were I ta'en here it would scarce be answer'd.

Sebastian. Belike you slew great number of his people?

Antonio. The offence is not of such a bloody nature;
 Albeit the quality of the time and quarrel 31
 Might well have given us bloody argument.
 It might have since been answer'd in repaying
 What we took from them; which, for traffic's sake,
 Most of our city did: only myself stood out;
 For which, if I be lapsed in this place,
 I shall pay dear.

Sebastian. Do not, then, walk too often.

Antonio. It doth not fit me. Hold, sir, here's my purse.

In the south suburbs, at the Elephant,
 Is best to lodge: I will bespeak our diet,
 Whiles you beguile the time and feed your knowledge
 With viewing of the town: there shall you have me. 40

Sebastian. Why I your purse?

Antonio. Haply your eye shall light upon some toy
 You have desire to purchase; and your store,
 I think, is not for idle markets, sir.

Sebastian. I'll be your purse-bearer and leave you
 For an hour.

Antonio. To the Elephant.

Sebastian. I do remember. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. OLIVIA'S garden.

Enter OLIVIA and MARIA.

Olivia. I have sent after him: he says he'll come;—
 How shall I feast him? what bestow of him?
 For youth is bought more oft than begg'd or borrow'd.
 I speak too loud.—

Where is Malvolio?—he is sad and civil,
 And suits well for a servant with my fortunes:—
 Where is Malvolio?

Maria. He's coming, madam; but in very strange manner. He is, sure, possessed, madam.

Olivia. Why, what's the matter? does he rave?

Maria. No, madam, he does nothing but smile: your ladyship were best to have some guard about you, if he come; for, sure, the man is tainted in's wits.

Olivia. Go call him hither. [Exit Maria.] I'm as mad as he,
 If sad and merry madness equal be.

Re-enter MARIA, with MALVOLIO.

How now, Malvolio!

Malvolio. Sweet lady, ho ho.

Olivia. Smilest thou?

I sent for thee upon a sad occasion. 20

Malvolio. Sad, lady! I could be sad: this does make some obstruction in the blood, this cross-gartering; but what of that? if it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true sonnet is, "Please one, and please all."

Olivia. Why, how dost thou, man? what is the matter with thee?

Malvolio. Not black in my mind, though yellow in my legs. It did come to his hands, and commands shall be executed: I think we do know the sweet Roman hand. 31

Olivia. Wilt thou go to bed, Malvolio?

Malvolio. To bed!

Olivia. God comfort thee! Why dost thou smile so and kiss thy hand so oft?

Maria. How do you, Malvolio?

Malvolio. At your request! yes; nightingales answer daws.

Maria. Why appear you with this ridiculous boldness before my lady? 41

Malvolio. "Be not afraid of greatness:"—'twas well writ.

Olivia. What meanest thou by that, Malvolio?

Malvolio. "Some are born great,"—

Olivia. Ha!

Malvolio. "Some achieve greatness,"—

Olivia. What sayest thou?

Malvolio. "And some have greatness thrust upon them" 50

Olivia. Heaven restore thee!

Malvolio. "Remember who commended thy yellow stockings,"—

Olivia. Thy yellow stockings!

Malvolio. "And wished to see thee cross-gartered."

Olivia. Cross-gartered!

Malvolio. "Go to, thou art made, if thou desirest to be so;"—

Olivia. Am I made?

59

Malvolio. "If not, let me see thee a servant still."

Olivia. Why, this is very midsummer madness.

Enter Servant.

Servant. Madam, the young gentleman of the Count Orsino's is returned: I could hardly entreat him back: he attends your ladyship's pleasure.

Olivia. I'll come to him. [Exit Servant.] Good Maria, let this fellow be looked to. Where's my cousin Toby? Let some of my people have a special care of him: I would not have him miscarry for the half of my dowry.

[Exeunt Olivia and Maria.]

Malvolio. O, ho! do you come near me now? no worse man than Sir Toby to look to me? This concurs directly with the letter: she sends him on purpose, that I may appear stubborn to him; for she incites me to that in the letter. "Cast thy humble slough," says she; "be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants; let thy tongue tang with arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity;"—and, consequently, sets down the manner how; as, a sad face, a reverent carriage, a slow tongue, in the habit of some sir of note, and so forth. I have limed her; but it is Jove's doing, and Jove make me thankful! And, when she went away now,

"Let this fellow be looked to :" fellow ! not Malvolio, nor after my degree, but fellow. Why, every thing adheres together, that no dram of a scruple, no scruple of a scruple, no obstacle, no incredulous or unsafe circumstance—What can be said? Nothing that can be can come between me and the full prospect of my hopes. Well, Jove, not I, is the doer of this, and he is to be thanked.

Re-enter MARIA, with Sir TOBY and FABIAN.

Sir Toby. Which way is he, in the name of sanctity ? If all the devils of hell be drawn in little, and Legion himself possessed him, yet I'll speak to him.

Fabian. Here he is, here he is.—How is't with you, sir ? how is't with you, man ?

Malvolio. Go off ; I discard you : let me enjoy my private : go off. 100 Maria. Lo, how hollow the fiend speaks within him ! did not I tell you ?—Sir Toby, my lady prays you to have a care of him.

Malvolio. Ah, ah ! does she so ?

Sir Toby. Go to, go to ; peace, peace ; we must deal gently with him : let me alone.—How do you, Malvolio ? how is't with you ? What, man ! defy the devil : consider, he's an enemy to mankind.

Malvolio. Do you know what you say ? 110

Maria. La you, an you speak ill of the devil, how he takes it at heart ! Pray God, he be not bewitched ! My lady would not lose him for more than I'll say.

Malvolio. How now, mistress !

Maria. O Lord !

Sir Toby. Prithee, hold thy peace ; this is not the way : do you not see you move him ? let me alone with him.

Fabian. No way but gentleness; gently, gently: the fiend is rough, and will not be roughly used.

Sir Toby. Why, how now, my bawcock! how dost thou, chuck?

Malvolio. Sir!

Sir Toby. Ay, Biddy, come with me. What, man! 'tis not for gravity to play at cherry-pit with Satan: hang him, foul collier! 130

Maria. Get him to say his prayers; good Sir Toby, get him to pray.

Malvolio. My prayers, minx!

Maria. No, I warrant you, he will not hear of godliness.

Malvolio. Go, hang yourselves all! you are idle shallow things: I am not of your element: you shall know more hereafter. [Exit. 140]

Sir Toby. Is't possible?

Fabian. If this were played upon a stage now, I could condemn it as an improbable fiction. 141

Sir Toby. His very genius hath taken the infection of the device, man.

Maria. Nay, pursue him now, lest the device take air and taint.

Fabian. Why, we shall make him mad indeed.

Maria. The house will be the quieter.

Sir Toby. Come, we'll have him in a dark room and bound. My niece is already in the belief that he's mad; we may carry it thus, for our pleasure and his penance, till our very pastime, tired out of breath, prompt us to have mercy on him: at which time we will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of madmen.—But see, but see.

Fabian. More matter for a May morning.

Enter Sir ANDREW.

Sir Andrew. Here's the challenge, read it: I warrant there's vinegar and pepper in't.

Fabian. Is't so saucy?

Sir Andrew. Ay, is't, I warrant him: do but read.

Sir Toby. Give me. [Reads] "Youth, whatsoever thou art, thou art but a scurvy fellow."

Fabian. Good, and valiant.

Sir Toby. [Reads] "Wonder not, nor admire not in thy mind, why I do call thee so, for I will show thee no reason for't."

Fabian. A good note: that keeps you from the blow of the law. 169

Sir Toby. [Reads] "Thou comest to the Lady Olivia, and in my sight she uses thee kindly: but thou liest in thy throat; that is not the matter I challenge thee for."

Fabian. Very brief, and to exceeding good sense-less.

Sir Toby. [Reads] "I will waylay thee going home; where if it be thy chance to kill me,"—

Fabian. Good.

Sir Toby. [Reads] "Thou killest me like a rogue and a villain." 180

Fabian. Still you keep o' the windy side of the law: good.

Sir Toby. [Reads] "Fare thee well; and God have mercy upon one of our souls! He may have mercy upon mine; but my hope is better, and so look to thyself. Thy friend, as thou usest him, and thy sworn enemy,

ANDREW AGUECHEEK."

If this letter move him not, his legs cannot: I'll give't him.

Maria. You may have very fit occasion for't: he is now in some commerce with my lady, and will by and by depart.

Sir Toby. Go, Sir Andrew; scout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bum-baily: so soon as ever thou seest him, draw; and, as thou drawest, swear horrible; for it comes to pass oft that a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent sharply twanged off, gives manhood more approbation than ever proof itself would have earned him. Away! 200

Sir Andrew. Nay, let me alone for swearing. [Exit.

Sir Toby. Now will not I deliver his letter: for the behaviour of the young gentleman gives him out to be of good capacity and breeding; his employment between his lord and my niece confirms no less: therefore this letter, being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth,—he will find it comes from a clodpole. But, sir, I will deliver his challenge by word of mouth; set upon Aguecheek a notable report of valour; and drive the gentleman—as I know his youth will aptly receive it—into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fury, and impetuosity. This will so fright them both, that they will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices.

Fabian. Here he comes with your niece: give them way till he take leave, and presently after him.

Sir Toby. I will meditate the while upon some horrid message for a challenge. 220 [Exeunt Sir Toby, Fabian, and Maria.

Re-enter OLIVIA, with VIOLA.

Olivia. I have said too much unto a heart of stone, And laid mine honour too uncharly on't:

There's something in me that reproves my fault;
 But such a headstrong potent fault it is,
 That it but mocks reproof.

Viola. With the same 'haviour that your passion bears Goes on my master's grief.

Olivia. Here, wear this jewel for me, 'tis my picture:
 Refuse it not; it hath no tongue to vex you:
 And I beseech you come again to-morrow. 230
 What shall you ask of me that I'll deny,
 That honour sav'd may upon asking give?

Viola. Nothing but this,—your true love for my master.

Olivia. How with mine honour may I give him that Which I have given to you?

Viola. I will acquit you.

Olivia. Well, come again to-morrow: fare thee well:
 A fiend like thee might bear my soul to hell. [Exit.]

Re-enter Sir TOBY and FABIAN.

Sir Toby. Gentleman, God save thee!

Viola. And you, sir.

239

Sir Toby. That defence thou hast, betake thee to't:
 of what nature the wrongs are thou hast done him, I know not; but thy interceper, full of despite, bloody as the hunter, attends thee at the orchard-end: dismount thy tuck, be yare in thy preparation; for thy assailant is quick, skilful, and deadly.

Viola. You mistake, sir; I am sure no man hath any quarrel to me: my remembrance is very free and clear from any image of offence done to any man. 250

Sir Toby. You'll find it otherwise, I assure you:
 therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your guard; for your opposite hath in him what youth, strength, skill, and wrath can furnish man withal.

Viola. I pray you, sir, what is he?

Sir Toby. He is knight, dubbed with unhatched rapier and on carpet consideration; but he is a devil in private brawl: souls and bodies hath he divorced three; and his incensement at this moment is so implacable, that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death and sepulchre: hob, nob, is his word; give't or take't.

Viola. I will return again into the house and desire some conduct of the lady. I am no fighter. I have heard of some kind of men that put quarrels purposely on others, to taste their valour: belike this is a man of that quirk.

Sir Toby. Sir, no; his indignation derives itself out of a very competent injury: therefore, get you on and give him his desire. Back you shall not to the house, unless you undertake that with me which with as much safety you might answer him: therefore, on, or strip your sword stark naked; for meddle you must, that's certain, or forswear to wear iron about you.

Viola. This is as uncivil as strange. I beseech you, do me this courteous office, as to know of the knight what my offence to him is: it is something of my negligence, nothing of my purpose.

Sir Toby. I will do so.—Signior Fabian, stay you by this gentleman till my return. [Exit.

Viola. Pray you, sir, do you know of this matter?

Fabian. I know the knight is incensed against you, even to a mortal arbitrement; but nothing of the circumstance more.

Viola. I beseech you, what manner of man is he? 289

Fabian. Nothing of that wonderful promise, to read him by his form, as you are like to find him in the proof of his valour. He is, indeed, sir, the most skilful, bloody, and fatal opposite that you could possibly have found in any part of Illyria. Will you walk towards him? I will make your peace with him, if I can.

Viola. I shall be much bound to you for't: I am one that had rather go with sir priest than sir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle. [Exeunt.]

Re-enter Sir TOBY, with Sir ANDREW.

Sir Toby. Why, man, he's a very devil; I have not seen such a firago. I had a pass with him, rapier, scabbard, and all, and he gives me the stuck in with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable; and on the answer, he pays you as surely as your feet hit the ground they step on: they say he has been fencer to the Sophy.

Sir Andrew. I'll not meddle with him.

Sir Toby. Ay, but he will not now be pacified: Fabian can scarce hold him yonder. 310

Sir Andrew. Plague on't, an I thought he had been valiant and so cunning in fence, I'd have seen him damned ere I'd have challenged him. Let him let the matter slip, and I'll give him my horse, gray Capilet.

Sir Toby. I'll make the motion: stand here, make a good show on't: this shall end without the perdition of souls.—[Aside] Marry, I'll ride your horse as well as I ride you. 319

Re-enter FABIAN and VIOLA.

[To Fabian] I have his horse to take up the quarrel: I have persuaded him the youth's a devil.

Fabian. He is as horribly conceited of him; and pants and looks pale, as if a bear were at his heels.

Sir Toby. [To Viola] There's no remedy, sir; he will fight with you for's oath sake: marry, he hath better bethought him of his quarrel; and he finds that now scarce to be worth talking of: therefore draw, for the supportance of his vow; he protests he will not hurt you. 330

Viola. [Aside] Pray God defend me! A little thing would make me tell them how much I lack of a man.

Fabian. Give ground, if you see him furious.

Sir Toby. Come, Sir Andrew, there's no remedy; the gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you; he cannot by the duello avoid it: but he has promised me, as he is a gentleman and a soldier, he will not hurt you. Come on; to't. 340

Sir Andrew. Pray God he keep his oath! [Draws.

Viola. I do assure you, 'tis against my will. [Draws.

Enter ANTONIO.

Antonio. Put up your sword. If this young gentleman Have done offence, I take the fault on me: If you offend him, I for him defy you.

Sir Toby. You, sir! why, what are you?

Antonio. One, sir, that for his love dares yet do more Than you have heard him brag to you he will. [Draws.

Sir Toby. Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you. [Draws.

Fabian. O good Sir Toby, hold! here come the officers.

Sir Toby. [To Antonio] I'll be with you anon.

Viola. [To Sir Andrew] Pray, sir, put your sword up, if you please.

Sir Andrew. Marry, will I, sir; and, for that I promised you, I'll be as good as my word: he will bear you easily and reins well.

Enter Officers.

First Officer. This is the man; do thy office.

Second Officer. Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit
Of Count Orsino. 361

Antonio. You do mistake me, sir.

First Officer. No, sir, no jot; I know your favour well,
Though now you have no sea-cap on your head.—
Take him away: he knows I know him well.

Antonio. I must obey.—[To Viola] This comes with seeking you:

But there's no remedy; I shall answer it.

What will you do, now my necessity

Makes me to ask you for my purse? It grieves me
Much more for what I cannot do for you 370
Than what befalls myself. You stand amaz'd;
But be of comfort.

Second Officer. Come, sir, away.

Antonio. I must entreat of you some of that money.

Viola. What money, sir?

For the fair kindness you have show'd me here,
And, part, being prompted by your present trouble,
Out of my lean and low ability
I'll lend you something: my having is not much;
I'll make division of my present with you: 380
Hold, there's half my coffer.

Antonio. Will you deny me now?

Is't possible that my deserts to you
Can lack persuasion? Do not tempt my misery,
Lest that it make me so unsound a man
As to upbraid you with those kindnesses
That I have done for you.

Viola. I know of none;

Nor know I you by voice or any feature:
 I hate ingratitude more in a man
 Than lying, vainness, babbling, drunkenness,
 Or any taint of vice whose strong corruption
 Inhabits our frail blood.

390

Antonio. O heavens themselves!

Second Officer. Come, sir, I pray you, go.

Ant. Let me speak a little. This youth that you see here
 I snatch'd one half out of the jaws of death;
 Reliev'd him with such sanctity of love,
 And to his image, which methought did promise
 Most venerable worth, did I devotion.

First Off. What's that to us? The time goes by: away!

Antonio. But O how vile an idol proves this god!
 Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame.
 In nature there's no blemish but the mind:
 None can be call'd deform'd but the unkind:
 Virtue is beauty; but the beauteous-evil
 Are empty trunks, o'erflourish'd by the devil.

401

First Officer. The man grows mad: away with him!—

Come, come, sir.

Antonio. Lead me on. [Exeunt Officers with Antonio.

Viola. Methinks his words do from such passion fly,
 That he believes himself: so do not I.
 Prove true, imagination, O prove true,
 That I, dear brother, be now ta'en for you!

410

Sir Toby. Come hither, knight; come hither, Fabian: we'll whisper o'er a couplet or two of most sage saws.

Viola. He nam'd Sebastian: I my brother know
 Yet living in my glass; even such and so
 In favour was my brother; and he went
 Still in this fashion, colour, ornament,—
 For him I imitate: O, if it prove,

Tempests are kind, and salt waves fresh in love! [Exit.]

Sir Toby. A very dishonest paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare: his dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian.

Fabian. A coward, a most devout coward, religious in it.

Sir Andrew. 'Slid, I'll after him again, and beat him.

Sir Toby. Do; cuff him soundly, but never draw thy sword.

Sir Andrew. An I do not,—

[Exit. 430]

Fabian. Come, let's see the event.

Sir Toby. I dare lay any money 'twill be nothing yet.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Before OLIVIA'S house.

Enter SEBASTIAN and Clown.

Clown. Will you make me believe that I am not sent for you?

Sebastian. Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow: Let me be clear of thee.

Clown. Well held out, i' faith! No, I do not know you; nor I am not sent to you by my lady, to bid you come speak with her; nor your name is not Master Cesario; nor this is not my nose neither. Nothing that is so is so.

Sebastian. I prithee, vent thy folly somewhere else: Thou know'st not me.

Clown. Vent my folly! he has heard that word of some great man, and now applies it to a fool: vent my folly! I am afraid this great lubber, the world, will prove a cockney.—I prithee, now, ungird thy strangeness, and tell me what I shall vent to my lady: shall I vent to her that thou art coming?

Sebastian. I prithee, foolish Greek, depart from me: There's money for thee: if you tarry longer, 20 I shall give worse payment.

Clown. By my troth, thou hast an open hand. These wise men, that give fools money, get themselves a good report—after fourteen years' purchase.

Enter Sir ANDREW, Sir TOBY, and FABIAN.

Sir Andrew. Now, sir, have I met you again? there's for you. [Striking Sebastian.

Sebastian. Why, there's for thee, and there, and there! [Beating Sir Andrew.

Are all the people mad?

Sir Toby. Hold, sir, or I'll throw your dagger o'er the house. 31

Clown. This will I tell my lady straight: I would not be in some of your coats for twopence. [Exit.

Sir Toby. Come on, sir; hold.

Sir Andrew. Nay, let him alone: I'll go another way to work with him; I'll have an action of battery against him, if there be any law in Illyria: though I struck him first, yet it's no matter for that.

Sebastian. Let go thy hand.

Sir Toby. Come, sir, I will not let you go. Come, my young soldier, put up your iron: you are well fleshed; come on.

Sebastian. I will be free from thee. [Disengages himself.] What wouldest thou now?

If thou dar'st tempt me further, draw thy sword. [Draws.]

Sir Toby. What, what? Nay, then I must have an ounce or two of this malapert blood from you. [Draws.]

Enter Olivia.

Olivia. Hold, Toby; on thy life, I charge thee, hold!

Sir Toby. Madam!

50

Olivia. Will it be ever thus? Ungracious wretch, Fit for the mountains and the barbarous caves, Where manners ne'er were preach'd! out of my sight!— Be not offended, dear Cesario.—

Rudesby, be gone!

[Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.]

I prithee, gentle friend,
Let thy fair wisdom, not thy passion, sway
In this uncivil and unjust extent
Against thy peace. Go with me to my house;
And hear thou there how many fruitless pranks
This ruffian hath botch'd up, that thou thereby 60
Mayst smile at this: thou shalt not choose but go:
Do not deny. Beshrew his soul for me,
He started one poor heart of mine in thee.

Sebastian. What relish is in this? how runs the stream?
Or I am mad, or else this is a dream:
Let fancy still my sense in Lethe steep;
If it be thus to dream, still let me sleep!

Olivia. Nay, come, I prithee: would thou'dst be rul'd by me!

Sebastian. Madam, I will.

Olivia. O, say so, and so be! [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. OLIVIA'S house.

Enter MARIA and Clown.

Maria. Nay, I prithee, put on this gown and this beard; make him believe thou art Sir Topas the curate: do it quickly; I'll call Sir Toby the whilst. [Exit.

Clown. Well, I'll put it on, and I will dissemble myself in't; and I would I were the first that ever dissembled in such a gown. I am not tall enough to become the function well, nor lean enough to be thought a good student: but to be said an honest man and a good housekeeper goes as fairly as to say a careful man and a great scholar. The competitors enter.

Enter Sir TOBY and MARIA.

Sir Toby. Jove bless thee, master parson.

Clown. Bonos dies, Sir Toby: for, as the old hermit of Prague, that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said to a niece of King Gorboduc, "That that is is;" so I, being master parson, am master parson; for, what is that but that, and is but is?

Sir Toby. To him, Sir Topas. 20

Clown. What, ho, I say! peace in this prison!

Sir Toby. The knave counterfeits well; a good knave.

Malvolio. [Within] Who calls there?

Clown. Sir Topas the curate, who comes to visit Malvolio the lunatic.

Malvolio. Sir Topas, Sir Topas, good Sir Topas, go to my lady.

Clown. Out, hyperbolical fiend! how vexest thou this man! talkest thou nothing but of ladies? 30

Sir Toby. Well said, master parson.

Malvolio. Sir Topas, never was man thus wronged: good Sir Topas, do not think I am mad: they have laid me here in hideous darkness.

Clown. Fie, thou dishonest Satan! I call thee by the most modest terms; for I am one of those gentle ones that will use the devil himself with courtesy: sayest thou that house is dark?

Malvolio. As hell, Sir Topas.

39

Clown. Why, it hath bay-windows transparent as barricadoes, and the clear-stories toward the south-north are as lustrous as ebony; and yet complainest thou of obstruction?

Malvolio. I am not mad, Sir Topas: I say to you, this house is dark.

Clown. Madman, thou errest: I say, there is no darkness but ignorance; in which thou art more puzzled than the Egyptians in their fog.

Malvolio. I say, this house is as dark as ignorance, though ignorance were as dark as hell; and I say, there was never man thus abused. I am no more mad than you are: make the trial of it in any constant question.

Clown. What is the opinion of Pythagoras concerning wildfowl?

Malvolio. That the soul of our grandam might haply inhabit a bird.

Clown. What thinkest thou of his opinion?

Malvolio. I think nobly of the soul, and no way approve his opinion.

60

Clown. Fare thee well. Remain thou still in darkness: thou shalt hold the opinion of Pythagoras ere I will allow of thy wits; and fear to kill a woodcock, lest thou dispossess the soul of thy grandam. Fare thee well.

Malvolio. Sir Topas, Sir Topas!

Sir Toby. My most exquisite Sir Topas!

Clown. Nay, I am for all waters.

Maria. Thou mightst have done this without thy beard and gown: he sees thee not. 70

Sir Toby. To him in thine own voice, and bring me word how thou findest him: I would we were well rid of this knavery. If he may be conveniently delivered, I would he were; for I am now so far in offence with my niece that I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Come by and by to my chamber.

[Exeunt Sir Toby and Maria.]

Clown. [Singing] "Hey, Robin, jolly Robin, Tell me how thy lady does."

Malvolio. Fool!

80

Clown. "My lady is unkind, perdy."

Malvolio. Fool!

Clown. "Alas, why is she so?"

Malvolio. Fool, I say!

Clown. "She loves another"—Who calls, ha?

Malvolio. Good fool, as ever thou wilt deserve well at my hand, help me to a candle, and pen, ink, and paper: as I am a gentleman, I will live to be thankful to thee for't.

Clown. Master Malvolio?

90

Malvolio. Ay, good fool.

Clown. Alas, sir, how fell you besides your five wits?

Malvolio. Fool, there was never man so notoriously abused: I am as well in my wits, fool, as thou art.

Clown. But as well? then you are mad indeed, if you be no better in your wits than a fool.

Malvolio. They have here propertied me; keep me in darkness, send ministers to me, asses, and do all they can to face me out of my wits. 101

Clown. Advise you what you say; the minister is here.—Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens restore! endeavour thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain bubble-babble.

Malvolio. Sir Topas!

Clown. Maintain no words with him, good fellow.—Who, I, sir? not I, sir. God be wi' you, good Sir Topas!—Marry, amen.—I will, sir, I will.

Malvolio. Fool, fool, fool, I say! 110

Clown. Alas, sir, be patient. What say you, sir? I am shent for speaking to you.

Malvolio. Good fool, help me to some light and some paper: I tell thee, I am as well in my wits as any man in Illyria.

Clown. Well-a-day that you were, sir!

Malvolio. By this hand, I am. Good fool, some ink, paper, and light; and convey what I will set down to my lady: it shall advantage thee more than ever the bearing of letter did. 120

Clown. I will help you to't. But tell me true, are you not mad indeed? or do you but counterfeit?

Malvolio. Believe me, I am not; I tell thee true.

Clown. Nay, I'll ne'er believe a madman till I see his brains. I will fetch you light, and paper, and ink.

Malvolio. Fool, I'll requite it in the highest degree: I prithee, be gone.

Clo. [Singing]

I am gone, sir,

And anon, sir,

I'll be with you again,

In a trice,

Like to the old Vice,

Your need to sustain;

130

Who, with dagger of lath,
In his rage and his wrath,
 Cries, ah, ha! to the devil :
Like a mad lad,
Pare thy nails, dad ;
 Adieu, goodman devil.

140

[Exit.

SCENE III. OLIVIA'S garden.

Enter SEBASTIAN.

Sebastian. This is the air; that is the glorious sun;
This pearl she gave me, I do feel't and see't:
And though 'tis wonder that enwraps me thus,
Yet 'tis not madness. Where's Antonio, then?
I could not find him at the Elephant:
Yet there he was; and there I found this credit,
That he did range the town to seek me out.
His counsel now might do me golden service;
For though my soul disputes well with my sense
That this may be some error, but no madness, 10
Yet doth this accident and flood of fortune
So far exceed all instance, all discourse,
That I am ready to distrust mine eyes,
And wrangle with my reason that persuades me
To any other trust but that I am mad,
Or else the lady's mad; yet, if 'twere so,
She could not sway her house, command her followers,
Take and give back affairs and their dispatch
With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing
As I perceive she does: there's something in't 20
That is deceivable. But here the lady comes.

Enter OLIVIA and a Priest.

Oli. Blame not this haste of mine. If you mean well,
Now go with me and with this holy man
Into the chantry by: there, before him,
And underneath that consecrated roof,
Plight me the full assurance of your faith;
That my most jealous and too doubtful soul
May live at peace. He shall conceal it
Whiles you are willing it shall come to note,
What time we will our celebration keep
According to my birth.—What do you say?

Sebastian. I'll follow this good man, and go with you;
And, having sworn truth, ever will be true.

Olivia. Then lead the way, good father; and heavens so shine,
That they may fairly note this act of mine! [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. Before Olivia's house.

Enter Clown and FABIAN.

Fabian. Now, as thou lovest me, let me see his letter.

Clown. Good Master Fabian, grant me another request.

Fabian. Any thing.

Clown. Do not desire to see this letter.

Fabian. This is, to give a dog, and in recompense desire my dog again.

Enter Duke, VIOLA, CURIO, and Lords.

Duke. Belong you to the Lady Olivia, friends?

Clown. Ay, sir; we are some of her trappings. 10

Duke. I know thee well: how dost thou, my good fellow?

Clown. Truly, sir, the better for my foes, and the worse for my friends.

Duke. Just the contrary; the better for thy friends.

Clown. No, sir, the worse.

Duke. How can that be?

Clown. Marry, sir, they praise me and make an ass of me; now my foes tell me plainly I am an ass: so that by my foes, sir, I profit in the knowledge of myself, and by my friends I am abused: so that, conclusions to be as kisses, if your four negatives make your two affirmatives, why, then, the worse for my friends and the better for my foes.

Duke. Why, this is excellent.

Clown. By my troth, sir, no; though it please you to be one of my friends. 30

Duke. Thou shalt not be the worse for me: there's gold.

Clown. But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another.

Duke. O, you give me ill counsel.

Clown. Put your grace in your pocket, sir, for this once, and let your flesh and blood obey it.

Duke. Well, I will be so much a sinner to be a double-dealer: there's another.

Clown. Primo, secundo, tertio, is a good play; and the old saying is, the third pays for all: the triplex, sir, is a good tripping measure; or the bells of Saint Bennet, sir, may put you in mind,—one, two, three.

Duke. You can fool no more money out of me at this throw: if you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may awake my bounty further.

Clown. Marry, sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again. I go, sir; but I would not have you to think that my desire of having is the sin of covetousness: but, as you say, sir, let your bounty take a nap, I will awake it anon. [Exit.]

Viola. Here comes the man, sir, that did rescue me.

Enter ANTONIO and Officers.

Duke. That face of his I do remember well; Yet, when I saw it last, it was besmear'd As black as Vulcan in the smoke of war: A bawbling vessel was he captain of, For shallow draught and bulk unprizable; With which such scatheful grapple did he make With the most noble bottom of our fleet, That very envy and the tongue of loss Cried fame and honour on him.—What's the matter? 60

First Officer. Orsino, this is that Antonio That took the Phoenix and her fraught from Candy; And this is he that did the Tiger board, When your young nephew Titus lost his leg: Here in the streets, desperate of shame and state, In private brabble did we apprehend him.

Viola. He did me kindness, sir, drew on my side; But in conclusion put strange speech upon me: 70 I know not what 'twas but distraction.

Duke. Notable pirate! thou salt-water thief! What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies,

Whom thou, in terms so bloody and so dear,
Hast made thine enemies?

Antonio.

Orsino, noble sir,

Be pleas'd that I shake off these names you give me:
Antonio never yet was thief or pirate,
Though, I confess, on base and ground enough,
Orsino's enemy. A witchcraft drew me hither:
That most ingrateful boy there by your side, 80
From the rude sea's enrag'd and foamy mouth
Did I redeem; a wreck past hope he was:
His life I gave him, and did thereto add
My love, without retention or restraint,
All his in dedication; for his sake
Did I expose myself, pure for his love,
Into the danger of this adverse town;
Drew to defend him when he was beset:
Where being apprehended, his false cunning—
Not meaning to partake with me in danger— 90
Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,
And grew a twenty-years-removed thing
While one would wink; denied me mine own purse,
Which I had recommended to his use
Not half an hour before.

Viola.

How can this be?

Duke. When came he to this town?

Antonio. To-day, my lord: and for three months before,
No interim, not a minute's vacancy,
Both day and night did we keep company.

Duke. Here comes the countess: now heaven walks on earth.— 100

But for thee, fellow,—fellow, thy words are madness:
Three months this youth hath tended upon me;
But more of that anon.—Take him aside.

Enter OLIVIA and Attendants.

Olivia. What would my lord, but that he may not have,
Wherein Olivia may seem serviceable?—
Cesario, you do not keep promise with me.

Viola. Madam!

Duke. Gracious Olivia,—

Oli. What do you say, Cesario?—Good my lord,— 109

Viola. My lord would speak; my duty hushes me.

Olivia. If it be aught to the old tune, my lord,
It is as fat and fulsome to mine ear
As howling after music.

Duke. Still so cruel?

Olivia. Still so constant, lord.

Duke. What, to perverseness? you uncivil lady,
To whose ingrate and unauspicious altars
My soul the faithfull'st offerings hath breath'd out
That e'er devotion tender'd! What shall I do?

Oli. Even what it please my lord, that shall become him.

Duke. Why should I not, had I the heart to do it, 120
Like to the Egyptian thief at point of death,
Kill what I love? a savage jealousy
That sometime savours nobly. But hear me this:
Since you to non-regardance cast my faith,
And that I partly know the instrument
That screws me from my true place in your favour,
Live you the marble-breasted tyrant still;
But this your minion, whom I know you love,
And whom, by heaven I swear, I tender dearly,
Him will I tear out of that cruel eye, 130
Where he sits crowned in his master's spite.
Come, boy, with me; my thoughts are ripe in mischief:
I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love,

To spite a raven's heart within a dove.

Viola. And I, most jocund, apt and willingly,
To do you rest, a thousand deaths would die.

Olivia. Where goes Cesario?

Viola. After him I love
More than I love these eyes, more than my life,
More, by all mores, than e'er I shall love wife.
If I do feign, you witnesses above 140
Punish my life for tainting of my love!

Olivia. Ay me, detested! how am I beguil'd!

Viola. Who does beguile you? who does do you wrong?

Olivia. Hast thou forgot thyself? is it so long?
Call forth the holy father.

Duke. [To Viola] Come away!

Olivia. Whither, my lord?—Cesario, husband, stay.

Duke. Husband!

Olivia. Ay, husband: can he that deny?

Duke. Her husband, sirrah!

Viola. No, my lord, not I.

Olivia. Alas, it is the baseness of thy fear
That makes thee strangle thy propriety: 150
Fear not, Cesario; take thy fortunes up;
Be that thou know'st thou art, and then thou art
As great as that thou fear'st.

Enter Priest.

O, welcome, father!

Father, I charge thee, by thy reverence,
Here to unfold—though lately we intended
To keep in darkness what occasion now
Reveals before 'tis ripe—what thou dost know
Hath newly pass'd between this youth and me.

Priest. A contract of eternal bond of love,

Confirm'd by mutual joinder of your hands,160
 Attested by the holy close of lips,
 Strengthen'd by interchangement of your rings ;
 And all the ceremony of this compact
 Seal'd in my function, by my testimony :
 Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my grave
 I have travell'd but two hours.

Duke. O thou dissembling cub ! what wilt thou be
 When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case ?
 Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
 That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow ?170
 Farewell, and take her ; but direct thy feet
 Where thou and I henceforth may never meet.

Viola. My lord, I do protest,—

Olivia. O do not swear !
 Hold little faith, though thou hast too much fear.

Enter Sir ANDREW.

Sir Andrew. For the love of God, a surgeon ! Send one presently to Sir Toby.

Olivia. What's the matter ?

Sir Andrew. He has broke my head across and has given Sir Toby a bloody coxcomb too : for the love of God, your help ! I had rather than forty pound I were at home.181

Olivia. Who has done this, Sir Andrew ?

Sir Andrew. The count's gentleman, one Cesario : we took him for a coward, but he's the very devil incarnate.

Duke. My gentleman Cesario ?

Sir Andrew. 'Od's lifelings, here he is !—You broke my head for nothing ; and that that I did, I was set on to do't by Sir Toby.

Viola. Why do you speak to me ? I never hurt you : 190

You drew your sword upon me without cause;
But I bespeak you fair, and hurt you not.

Sir Andrew. If a bloody coxcomb be a hurt, you have hurt me: I think you set nothing by a bloody coxcomb. Here comes Sir Toby halting,—you shall hear more: but if he had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did.

Enter Sir Toby and Clown.

Duke. How now, gentleman! how is't with you? 200

Sir Toby. That's all one: he has hurt me, and there's the end on't. Sot, didst see Dick surgeon, sot?

Clown. O, he's drunk, Sir Toby, an hour agone; his eyes were set at eight i' the morning.

Sir Toby. Then he's a rogue and a passy measures pavin: I hate a drunken rogue.

Olivia. Away with him! Who hath made this havoc with them?

Sir Andrew. I'll help you, Sir Toby, because we'll be dressed together. 211

Sir Toby. Will you help? an ass-head and a coxcomb and a knave,—a thin-faced knave, a gull!

Olivia. Get him to bed, and let his hurt be look'd to.

[Exeunt Clown, Fabian, Sir Toby, and Sir Andrew.

Enter SEBASTIAN.

Seb. I am sorry, madam, I have hurt your kinsman; But, had it been the brother of my blood, I must have done no less with wit and safety. You throw a strange regard upon me, and by that I do perceive it hath offended you: 220 Pardon me, sweet one, even for the vows We made each other but so late ago.

Duke. One face, one voice, one habit, and two persons,—
A natural perspective, that is and is not !

Sebastian. Antonio, O my dear Antonio !
How have the hours rack'd and tortur'd me,
Since I have lost thee !

Antonio. Sebastian are you ?

Sebastian. Fear'st thou that, Antonio ?

Antonio. How have you made division of yourself ?
An apple, cleft in two, is not more twin 230
Than these two creatures. Which is Sebastian ?

Olivia. Most wonderful !

Sebastian. Do I stand there ? I never had a brother ;
Nor can there be that deity in my nature,
Of here and every where. I had a sister,
Whom the blind waves and surges have devour'd.—
[To Viola] Of charity, what kin are you to me ?
What countryman ? what name ? what parentage ?

Viola. Of Messaline : Sebastian was my father ;
Such a Sebastian was my brother too, 240
So went he suited to his watery tomb :
If spirits can assume both form and suit,
You come to fright us.

Sebastian. A spirit I am indeed ;
But am in that dimension grossly clad
Which from the womb I did participate.
Were you a woman, as the rest goes even,
I should my tears let fall upon your cheek,
And say, "Thrice-welcome, drowned Viola !"

Viola. My father had a mole upon his brow.

Sebastian. And so had mine. 250

Viola. And died that day when Viola from her birth
Had number'd thirteen years.

Sebastian. O, that record is lively in my soul !

He finished, indeed, his mortal act
 That day that made my sister thirteen years.

Viola. If nothing lets to make us happy both
 But this my masculine usurp'd attire,
 Do not embrace me till each circumstance
 Of place, time, fortune, do cohere and jump
 That I am Viola : which to confirm, 260
 I'll bring you to a captain in this town,
 Where lie my maiden weeds ; by whose gentle help
 I was preserv'd to serve this noble count.
 All the occurrence of my fortune since
 Hath been between this lady and this lord.

Sebastian. [To Olivia] So comes it, lady, you have been mistook :

But nature to her bias drew in that.
 You would have been contracted to a maid ;
 Now are you therein, by my life, deceiv'd,—
 You are betroth'd both to a maid and man. 270

Duke. Be not amaz'd ; right noble is his blood.
 If this be so, as yet the glass seems true,
 I shall have share in this most happy wreck.—
 [To Viola] Boy, thou hast said to me a thousand times
 Thou never shouldst love woman like to me.

Viola. And all those sayings will I over-swear ;
 And all those swearings keep as true in soul
 As doth that orbed continent the fire
 That severs day from night.

Duke. Give me thy hand ;
 And let me see thee in thy woman's weeds. 280

Viola. The captain that did bring me first on shore
 Hath my maid's garments : he upon some action
 Is now in durance, at Malvolio's suit,
 A gentleman and follower of my lady's.

Olivia. He shall enlarge him:—fetch Malvolio hither;
And yet, alas, now I remember me,
They say, poor gentleman, he's much distract.

Re-enter Clown with a letter, and FABIAN.

A most extracting frenzy of mine own
From my remembrance clearly banish'd his.—
How does he, sirrah?

290

Clown. Truly, madam, he holds Beelzebub at the stave's end as well as a man in his case may do: he has here writ a letter to you; I should have given't you to-day morning, but as a madman's epistles are no gospels, so it skills not much when they are delivered.

Olivia. Open't and read it.

Clown. Look, then, to be well edified when the fool delivers the madman. [Reads] "By the Lord, madam,"— Olivia. How now! art thou mad?

301

Clown. No, madam, I do but read madness: an your ladyship will have it as it ought to be, you must allow vox.

Olivia. Prithee, read i' thy right wits.

Clown. So I do, madonna; but to read his right wits is to read thus: therefore perpend, my princess, and give ear.

Olivia. [To Fabian] Read it you, sirrah.

Fabian. [Reads] "By the Lord, madam, you wrong me, and the world shall know it: though you have put me into darkness and given your drunken cousin rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my senses as well as your ladyship. I have your own letter that induced me to the semblance I put on; with the which I doubt not but to do myself much right, or you much shame. Think of me as you please. I leave my duty a little unthought of, and speak out of my injury."

THE MADLY-US ED MALVOLIO."

Olivia. Did he write this?

320

Clown. Ay, madam.

Duke. This savours not much of distraction.

Olivia. See him deliver'd, Fabian; bring him hither.

[Exit Fabian.

My lord, so please you, these things further thought on,
To think me as well a sister as a wife,
One day shall crown the alliance on't, so please you,
Here at my house and at my proper cost.

Duke. Madam, I am most apt to embrace your offer.—

[To Viola] Your master quits you; and for your service done him,

So much against the mettle of your sex, 330
So far beneath your soft and tender breeding,
And since you call'd me master for so long,
Here is my hand: you shall from this time be
Your master's mistress.

Olivia. A sister! you are she.

Re-enter FABIAN, with MALVOLIO.

Duke. Is this the madman?

Olivia. Ay, my lord, this same.—

How now, Malvolio!

Malvolio. Madam, you have done me wrong,
Notorious wrong.

Olivia. Have I, Malvolio? no.

Malvolio. Lady, you have. Pray you, peruse that letter.
You must not now deny it is your hand:
Write from it, if you can, in hand or phrase; 340
Or say 'tis not your seal, not your invention:
You can say none of this: well, grant it, then,
And tell me, in the modesty of honour,
Why you have given me such clear lights of favour,

Bade me come smiling and cross-garter'd to you,
 To put on yellow stockings and to frown
 Upon Sir Toby and the lighter people;
 And, acting this in an obedient hope,
 Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
 Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
 And made the most notorious geck and gull
 That e'er invention play'd on? tell me why.

350

Olivia. Alas, Malvolio, this is not my writing,
 Though, I confess, much like the character:
 But out of question 'tis Maria's hand.
 And now I do bethink me, it was she
 First told me thou wast mad: then cam'st in smiling,
 And in such forms which here were presuppos'd
 Upon thee in the letter. Prithee, be content:
 This practice hath most shrewdly pass'd upon thee; 360
 But when we know the grounds and authors of it,
 Thou shalt be both the plaintiff and the judge
 Of thine own cause.

Fabian. Good madam, hear me speak,
 And let no quarrel nor no brawl to come
 Taint the condition of this present hour,
 Which I have wonder'd at. In hope it shall not,
 Most freely I confess, myself and Toby
 Set this device against Malvolio here,
 Upon some stubborn and uncourteous parts
 We had conceiv'd against him: Maria writ
 The letter at Sir Toby's great importance;
 In recompense whereof he hath married her.
 How with a sportful malice it was follow'd,
 May rather pluck on laughter than revenge;
 If that the injuries be justly weigh'd
 That have on both sides pass'd.

370

Olivia. Alas, poor fool, how have they baffled thee!

Clown. Why, "some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrown upon them." I was one, sir, in this interlude ; one Sir Topas, sir ; but that's all one. "By the Lord, fool, I am not mad." But do you remember? "Madam, why laugh you at such a barren rascal? an you smile not, he's gagged :" and thus the whirligig of time brings in his revenges.

Mal. I'll be reveng'd on the whole pack of you. [Exit.

Olivia. He hath been most notoriously abus'd.

Duke. Pursue him, and entreat him to a peace :

He hath not told us of the captain yet : 390

When that is known, and golden time convents,
A solemn combination shall be made

Of our dear souls. Meantime, sweet sister,
We will not part from hence. Cesario, come ;
For so you shall be, while you are a man ;
But when in other habits you are seen,
Orsino's mistress and his fancy's queen.

[Exeunt all, except Clown.

Song.

Clo. When that I was and a little tiny boy,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
A foolish thing was but a toy, 400
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came to man's estate,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
'Gainst knaves and thieves men shut their gate,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came, alas, to wive,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,

By swaggering could I never thrive,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came unto my beds,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
With toss-pots still had drunken heads,
For the rain it raineth every day.

A great while ago the world begun,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain:
But that's all one, our play is done,
And we'll strive to please you every day.

410

[Exit.]

NOTES.

Abbreviations:

E. = the English language;

G. = Glossary.

Several other abbreviations used sometimes in the Notes are explained at the beginning of the Glossary, in which they occur more frequently. They should be observed; see p. 147.

ACT I.

Scene 1.

At the outset a dramatist should let us know what is supposed to have gone before, and give us some idea of what the play is to be about and who the chief characters are. From the first Scene we learn (1) a good deal about Orsino—we see how dreamy, changeable, "high fantastical" he is; (2) something about Olivia and the relations existing between her and Orsino.

1. Cf. the opening of Scene 4 in Act II. Orsino's love of music not only gives us an aspect of his character; it helps to explain the rapid way in which Viola wins his favour. Cf. her words, I. 2. 59.

music...the food of love; cf. Antony and Cleopatra, II. 5. 1, 2:

"Give me some music; music, moody food
Of us that trade in love."

3. The appetite, i.e. love.

4. dying fall, a cadence that slowly passed away. fall, see G.

5. the sweet sound, i.e. the gentle murmur of the breeze, "the low sweet hum of the summer air" (Grant White). By a poetical figure of speech this sound, instead of the breeze that causes it, is said to bring ("give") and carry away ("steal") fragrance.

Though the 1st and later Folios all read sound, Pope believed that Shakespeare wrote south = 'south wind,' a reading adopted by some editors. But (1) sound for south is not in itself a probable printer's error, nothing in the neighbouring words makes it probable, and it is most improbable that the printer would blunder so at the very outset of his work. The editors of the later Folios clearly did not consider sound a blunder in the 1st Folio. (2) The south wind in Shakespeare as in Milton (Paradise Lost, xi. 738) typifies storm and rain, and is therefore inappropriate here. Cf. As You Like It, III. 5. 50, "foggy south, puffing with wind and rain"; and Henry IV., v. 1. 3—6.

9—15. Love (Orsino says) is very susceptible to impressions and very changeable. Love 'receiveth,' i.e. is affected by, some influence, and lo! in a minute the influence loses its power.

9. quick and fresh, sensitive and full of life.
10. that, seeing that. capacity, power of containing.
12. validity, value. pitch, height, i. e. excellence.
13. falls into abatement, loses its value.
14. shapes, conceptions. fancy, love; see II. 4. 34.
15. alone, above everything else. fantastical, imaginative.

17, 18. There is a quibble on hart (stag) and heart, as in Julius Caesar, III. 1. 204, 208; see IV. 1. 63, note. Shakespeare makes his characters jest thus in moments of great emotion as a relief to the feelings. The dying Gaunt puns on his own name, Richard II., II. 1. 73—83, just as in the Ajax of Sophocles the unhappy Ajax puns on Alas and alaſew, 'to cry alas!'

19—23. An allusion to the classical story of the hunter Actæon, who, for gazing indiscreetly on Diana, goddess of the chase, was changed into a stag, and torn to pieces by his hounds on Mt Cithæron. A similar allegorical use of the legend had been made already by Elizabethan writers. Cf. Daniel's Sonnets to Delia (1594), v, "My thoughts, like hounds, pursue me to my death." Note how the comparison of Olivia with the goddess is implied.

20. purg'd the air; so that he breathed a purer atmosphere in her presence. It is one of those fanciful thoughts, expressed in fanciful language, which characterise Orsino throughout.

22. fell, fierce, savage.
24. might not, could not, was not allowed.
25. her handmaid, i.e. Maria, of whom we shall hear much.

26. element, sky; see G. till seven years' heat, i.e. for seven summers. Some change to years hence.

28. cloistress, nun; see G.

30. brine, tears; cf. "salt water," II. 1. 32. season, keep fresh. The metaphor of 'preserving' runs through the three lines.

32. remembrance; scan as four syllables, rememb-e-rance.

33. of that fine frame, a heart so delicately constituted.

34. to pay, as to pay.

35. According to classical legend, Cupid, the god of love, had two sorts of arrows ('shafts'), one tipped with gold to inspire love, the other with lead to repel love. Cf. Glosse to Spenser's Shepheards Calender, March, "He [Cupid] is sayd to have shafts, some leaden, some golden."

36. Orsino means that Olivia's love of her husband will swallow up all her affections for other people.

37—39. In the 1st Folio reading there is no comma from are all down to king. It seems to me best to insert commas after supplied and perfections, and explain—"when liver, brain...are all supplied, and her sweet perfections are filled, with the selfsame king." Some editors print:

"When liver, brain and heart,

These sovereign thrones, are all supplied and fill'd

(Her sweet perfections) with one self king";

they take the words in brackets as a parenthetic exclamation in apposition either to liver, brain and heart or to thrones. Others bracket the same three words, read perfection, and take it in apposition to the rest of the sentence—"a thing which will prove her sweet perfection"; they regard the words as an allusion to the idea that marriage makes perfect or complete the female nature (cf. II. 4. 42).

37. Liver; then supposed to be the seat of the passions, especially of love—see II. 4. 101, II. 5. 106, and cf. fecur ulcerosum in Horace, Odes I. 25. 15; and of courage (cf. III. 2. 22, 66).

39. perfections, excellent qualities; cf. I. 5. 315. Scan perfect-ions as four syllables. In Shakespeare and in Milton's early poems the termination -ion, especially with words ending in ction, such as 'perfection,' 'affection,' 'distraction,' is often treated as two syllables; but commonly this occurs at the end of a line. In Middle English poetry the termination -ion was always treated as two syllables. See I. 5. 315, v. 71. self= self-same, as the 2nd Folio reads. Properly self meant 'same' (cf. Germ. selbe), and in Shakespeare is often used so.

Orsino's prophecy about Olivia is soon fulfilled. He himself is really "in love with being in love," and relishes his love-pains.

Scene 2.

- 3, 4. Illyria...Elysium; probably a pun is intended.
6. i.e. it was only by chance that you yourself were saved.
9. split, broke up on the rocks, was wrecked.
10. those poor number; Shakespeare treats number as a plural = 'few.'
- As the Captain speaks he points to the sailors, who have perhaps moved a little way off while he is speaking to Viola.
11. driving, drifting with the wind and waves; cf. 'driving rain.'
14. lived, kept float; we speak of a ship 'living through' a storm, i.e. not sinking.
15. Arion; the Folios misprint Orion. It is an allusion to the classical story (a great favourite with Elizabethan writers—see Midsummer-Night's Dream, II. i. 150) of the Greek musician Arion. On one occasion the sailors of a ship in which he was returning with many treasures from Sicily to his home at Corinth plotted his murder; whereupon he threw himself into the sea, and was carried safely to land by a dolphin which had been touched by the strains of his lute. The notion of dolphins being fond of music is often alluded to in poetry.
- 19—21. i.e. the fact that I escaped gives me a hope (which your words support) that my brother too has escaped.
21. country; scan as three syllables, count-c-ry; cf. I. i. 32.
25. i.e. noble in nature as in name.
28. Cf. v. 271, where Orsino shows that he knew Viola's father.
30. late, lately.
32. fresh in murmur, a recent rumour.
33. the less, i.e. in rank, not number; cf. Macbeth, v. 4. 12, "Both more and less have given him the revolt," i.e. great people and small.
39. for whose dear love, for her great love of whom; dear = 'heart-felt,' intensifying the idea of love (cf. I. 4. 25).
- 42—44. i.e. and that my true rank ("estate") might not be discovered till it suited me. Viola's plan, it seems, was to take service in some household till she could arrange for her return home. Then she could safely say who she was.
43. mellow, ripe; most probably an adjective.
44. What my estate is, i.e. as to what; dependent on delivered = 'discovered, made known.'
- compass*, achieve, bring about.
47. behaviour = outward appearance, rather than manners alone.
- 48, 49. i.e. a fair outside does not always mean a fair inside. We shall find this sentiment turned against Viola herself with very amusing effect later on (III. 4. 399—404).

though that; that is often in Shakespeare added to conjunctions without affecting the sense; cf. ‘if that’ (I. 5. 54, 324), ‘lest that’ (III. 4. 384). There seems to be an ellipse in these cases, e.g. ‘though it is the case that,’ ‘if it be the case that.’

53. Conceal me what I am. The dependent clause (“what I am”) is a redundant object explanatory of the first object (“me”). Cf. I. 5. 269. So in Luke iv. 34, “I know thee who thou art.”

54. such disguise, i.e. the page’s dress. We see afterwards (v. 261—263) how the Captain assisted her.

57—59. Orsino’s fondness for music (of which possibly Viola had heard her father speak—cf. 28) has been observed already (I. 1).

59. allow me, approve me; see G.

62. mute, silent helper. “Eunuch” shows that mute implies “Turkish mute” (Hen. V. I. 2. 232), i.e. a dumb or tongueless officer employed in Turkey for secret purposes, e.g. as executioner.

Scene 3.

5. cousin=‘niece’; see G.

7. let her except before excepted, let her object (“take exceptions”) to what has been before objected to. It is a quasi-legal phrase—from Law Lat. exceptis excipiendis—which Sir Toby uses in quibbling allusion to Maria’s last remark.

10. confine myself, i.e. in clothes=‘dress myself’; a word-play.

13. straps, leather-slips attached to boots to pull them on with.

20. tall, stout, valiant; see G.

21. to the purpose; as we say, ‘to the point.’

22. ducat, a coin then (1602) worth in England 6s. 8d.; see G.

23. but a year; i.e. he will spend all his ducats in one year.

25. a very fool, a perfect fool; cf. II. 4. 77, “a very opal.”

27. viol-de-gamboys, the bass-viol; see G.

speaks three or four languages. Sir Toby is rather daring in his praise of his friend, for Sir Andrew has to enquire the meaning of pourquoi, and confesses that he neglected “the tongues” (95—97).

30. A natural meant a fool (cf. The Tempest, III. 2. 37), and Maria quibbles on the two possible senses, (1) ‘naturally, by nature,’ (2) ‘like a fool.’ Some change needlessly to all most natural.

32, 33. allay the gust, appease his taste for (Lat. gustus). We shall have later on an illustration of Sir Andrew’s quarrelsomeness.

37. substractors; he means detractors. Cf. the mistakes that Bottom makes in Midsummer-Night's Dream through his love of long words, e.g. 'exposition' for 'disposition,' IV. i. 43. Sheridan's famous character Mrs Malaprop (F. mal-à-propos) in the comedy of The Rivals has given her name to verbal blunders—malapropisms, as we say—of this kind. Her errors (e.g. 'epitaph' for 'epithet') are diverting.

43. coystril, a mean paltry fellow; see G.

44. "A large top was formerly kept in every village, to be whipped in frosty weather, that the peasants might be kept warm by exercise, and out of mischief, while they could not work."

Castiliano vulgo. Warburton proposed volto—'put on your Castilian countenance, i.e. grave solemn looks.' Even if that was what Sir Toby wished to say, Shakespeare probably intended that he should blunder (as in line 37). Most likely, however, Sir Toby in his desire to impress Maria merely coined a phrase which had a fine foreign sound. Castiliano (Spanish Castellano, 'belonging to Castile') and Castile are used by Elizabethans in exclamatory phrases; it seems to have been a piece of Elizabethan slang, perhaps "adopted immediately after the defeat of the Armada, and...expressive of jollity." Perhaps Sir Toby means: 'Now (with the bibulous Sir Andrew coming) we shall be a rollicking Castilian crowd: no use your chiding me for drinking: look out, rather, for the Castilian touch.'

53. What's that?, what does accost (see G.) mean? The stupid Sir A. is constantly mistaking or asking the meaning of things; cf. 80, 95.

65. an, if; see G. let part, let her depart; cf. v. 394.

67, 68. An you part so... Note how Sir Andrew echoes the words of Sir Toby and follows his lead; cf. II. 3. 176, 177 (about Maria's "device"), II. 5. 200—210.

69. fools in hand, fools to deal with. Maria quibbles in reply.

71. Marry, see G.

73. Now, sir. Of course, she takes Sir Andrew's hand and hints (but he does not see her meaning) that now she does think that she has a "fool in hand" (69).

thought is free; a proverbial saying very apt here since it echoes Sir Andrew's "do you think" in 68. Cf. The Tempest, III. 2. 132.

74. "The bringing the hand to the buttery-bar, and letting it drink, is a proverbial phrase among forward Abigails [maid-servants], to ask at once for a kiss and a present."—Kenrick. buttery-bar, see G.

77. It's dry, i.e. the hand; this was considered a sign that the owner of the hand was indifferent to love.

80. what's your jest? He does not understand what she meant by dry in 77. In the next line 81 dry=‘stupid,’ as in I. 5. 45. Cf. Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2. 373, “This jest is dry to me.”

83. at my fingers' ends. Another word-play or quibble. She means (1) that she is always ready with a joke, (2) that she has hold of Sir Andrew, who is certainly very “dry” (=stupid). A point like this is much clearer when the play is acted. Here, for instance, an actress could raise Sir Andrew’s hand high up and then suddenly drop it. Such a gesture would make “at my fingers’ ends” quite clear.

84. barren, i.e. of jests; she has no more to make.

85. lackest, needest, i.e. to cheer him. canary, i.e. wine; see G.

86. put down; humiliated, made to look foolish.

90. eater of beef; Shakespeare was thinking of his own countrymen. It was a stock joke against the English that they liked “great meals of beef,” as the Constable of France says in Henry V., III. 7. 161. “Beef-witted” is a term of reproach in Troilus and Cressida, II. 1. 14. Curious notions prevailed then as to the effect of food upon the character; a great authority on them is Burton’s Anatomy of Melancholy (1621). He says that beef produces melancholy (I. 95, ed. 1800).

94. ride home; we hear of his horse “gray Capilet,” III. 4. 315.

97. the tongues, languages; cf. Much Ado About Nothing, v. 1. 167, “he hath the tongues,” i.e. is a good linguist. Perhaps Sir Andrew pronounces tongues oddly: anyhow Sir Toby puns upon tongues and tongs (i.e. curling-tongs), a joke lost upon his friend. In Coriolanus, III. 1. 35, the 2nd Folio has tongs for tongues.

98. bear-baiting; see II. 5. 9, note. The Bear Garden on the Bank-side in Southwark; close to the Globe Theatre, was a very popular London resort, till 1642, when it was closed.

118. there's life in't, it is not a hopeless case; cf. Lear, IV. 6. 206.

121. masques; see G. revels, festivities; see G.

122. kickshawses, trifles; see G.

126. old; ‘practised’; we speak of a man being ‘an old hand’ at something. Sir Andrew will not compare himself with an expert or with his “bettters.” He is self-diffluent, which makes him look up to the self-confident Sir Toby. Theobald suggested a nobleman (i.e. Orsino).

127, 130. galliard, a quick dance; see G. Quibbling allusions to eating capers (a sort of pickle) with boiled mutton and to the dancing movement called the capriole (goat’s leap).

131. the back-trick, a caper backwards in dancing.

133. Wherefore are these things hid? He argues, ‘Why not display these gifts and accomplishments, so that Olivia may see them? Why go home and let them be hidden? Stay a little longer and enjoy these “kickshawses”.’ One reason, perhaps the chief, why Sir Toby wants Sir Andrew to remain is that he may get more money out of him.

134, 135. a curtain...picture. In picture galleries and continental churches the finest pictures are often protected by curtains from light, dust, etc. See again I. 5. 251 (where Olivia unveils herself).

135. Possibly Mistress Mall is as imaginary as the Clown’s philosopher Quinapalus (I. 5. 39). Some personal allusion, however, seems intended, and Steevens suggested that it was to a well-known Elizabethan character, Mary Frith, commonly called “Mall (or Moll) Cutpurse” from her celebrity as a thief. She is constantly mentioned in contemporary works (rather later, however, than Twelfth Night), and is introduced as a character in more than one play. The accounts vary as to the date of her birth, Malone placing it in 1584 and other writers in 1589: the latter date makes it quite, and the former almost, impossible that she should have become celebrated by 1601, the probable date of Twelfth Night. But a casual allusion like this may well have been inserted some time after the first production of the play; and on this principle I am inclined to think that she is referred to here. Mall is a diminutive of Mary.

137. galliard...coranto; see each word in G.

142. under the star. It was then a popular belief that the characters, bodies and fortunes of men were influenced by the star under which they were born. In Lear, I. 2. 128—144 Shakespeare makes Edmund ridicule these astrological notions, and doubtless he himself did not believe in them, though they are often referred to in his plays. Cf. I. 4. 35, II. I. 3—5, II. 5. 156 (“in my stars”), 184 (“my stars be praised”); and see malignant in G.

the star of a galliard. Sir Toby humorously suggests that the influence of some special star enables men to excel in the galliard.

143. does indifferent well, looks pretty well.

144. flame-coloured stock, bright yellow stocking (i.e. such as Malvolio puts on, III. 4). The Folios have dam'd-colour'd. Most editors read flame-coloured, found in I Henry IV., I. 2. 11, and often in the 17th century dramatists; some prefer damask-coloured, i.e. red.

147. born under Taurus. See 142, note. According to one branch of astrology (medical astrology) each of the 12 signs of the Zodiac controlled a particular portion of the human body and its affections. This notion is seen in the diagrams of some old-fashioned almanacs. Really Taurus was thought to govern the neck and throat.

Scene 4.

The humour and interest of the Scenes in which Viola is with Olivia and Orsino turn largely upon the fact that they do not know her to be a girl while the audience does. Shakespeare purposely makes Olivia and Orsino say things (cf. lines 30—34) which have for the audience a point whereof the speaker is quite unconscious. It is a dramatic artifice similar to the "irony" which Greek dramatists employ. In the same way many of Viola's remarks (cf. III. i. 169—172) contain veiled allusions to her sex which the audience perceives at once, whereas Olivia or Orsino sees no allusion at all.

2. much advanced, promoted to a high position. We have seen one reason why Cesario (Viola) was likely to win Orsino's favour.

3. three days. A time-reference, showing how long has elapsed since Scene 2; and probably Scenes 1—3 took place on the same day.

5. fear his humour, i.e. that he is changeable, capricious; cf. As You Like It, I. 2. 278, "the duke is humorous" = capricious.

11. On your attendance, I await your orders.

12. Stand you; the courtiers. He addresses Cesario (Viola) as thou (13), a sign of familiarity; cf. tu in French, du in German.

13. but = than; used so after negative comparatives; cf. II. 5. 201.

13, 14. Cf. I Henry IV., I. 3. 188, "And now I will unclasp a secret book" (said by Worcester when he reveals his scheme to Hotspur).

16. Scan access, as usually in Shakespeare. See G.

21. civil bounds, bounds of civility or good manners. Cf. Julius Caesar, I. 2. 9, "sterile curse" = curse of sterility; IV. 2. 16, "familiar instances" = instances (signs) of familiarity. In such phrases (frequent in Shakespeare) the adjective defines the noun's sphere or character: thus the curse consists in sterility, the instance (sign) is one of familiarity. In German this relation would be expressed by a compound noun.

23. say I, suppose that I.

25. dear faith, heartfelt devotion. dear; cf. I. 2. 39, note.

27. attend, pay attention to. His prediction is fulfilled too truly.

28. nuncio, messenger; see G. Scan aspects always in Shakespeare.

31. thou art a man, arrived at manhood; note the "irony" here.

32. rubious, ruddy. pipe, voice; properly throat, wind-pipe.

small; used of a clear, treble voice; cf. Midsummer-Night's Dream, I. 2. 52, "you may speak small," i.e. like a woman.

33. sound, clear in tone; some change to "shril in sound."

34. i.e. everything about you resembles a woman. part, character. The fact that on the Elizabethan stage female parts were acted by young men or boys made these disguises a favourite dramatic device.

35. constellation, character (as influenced by the stars).

39, 40. as freely; connect with to call. Cesario (Viola) shall be as much master of Orsino's fortunes as Orsino himself.

41, 42. The fact that Viola is in love with Orsino has to be made plain at the outset because it lends so much more point to the Scenes between them, and also to the Scenes between Olivia and Viola. Twelfth Night is a play of "loves at first sight."

41. barful, full of bars, i.e. impediments.

Scene 5.

3. in way of thy excuse, to make excuses for thee (to Olivia).

6. to fear no colours, to fear no foe, to have no fears; a common Elizabethan phrase, in which colours=flags, i.e. of an enemy; cf. in the wars (12), which keeps up the military metaphor. He quibbles on colours and collars, i.e. halters, in which to be "well hanged." So in 2 Henry IV. v. 5. 92.

7. make that good, prove what you say.

9. lenten, meagre, poor (like meagre Lenten food).

21. for turning away, as for being dismissed. To lose his place in Olivia's house would be less disagreeable in summer than in winter. This indicates the time of year in which the events of the play happen.

bear it out, make it (his dismissal) supportable.

27. gaskins, loose breeches; fastened to the doublet by laces called points: hence Maria's pun. gaskin; a corruption of Ital. Grechesco, 'Greekish,' used of a kind of hose brought from Greece into Venice.

29. Sir Toby; a hint that he might marry Maria.

34. You were best, you had best. Cf. II. 2. 27, "she were better," and III. 4. 12, "your ladyship were best." This idiom represents an impersonal construction changed into a personal. Thus "I were best" (Cymbeline, III. 6. 19) would in earlier English have been "me were best" = 'to me it were best.' People misunderstood that (1) me was a dative, (2) the sentence was impersonal, and substituted I which seemed more correct. The impersonal constructions so largely used in Old English were becoming less familiar to the Elizabethans.

35. Wit; he apostrophises wit as though it were a goddess.

39. Quinapalus. It is part of the Clown's professional humour to invent characters with sonorous names, such as this philosopher Quinapalus and "Pigrogromitus" (II. 3. 23). Sometimes he fathers on them the proverbs and nonsensical maxims of which he is so fond; cf. IV. 2. 15. Dickens makes Sam Weller in Pickwick employ a similar device.

45. dry, stupid; cf. I. 3. 81.

46. dishonest, because he absents himself so much from the house.

47. madonna, my lady; see G.

51. botcher, patcher, mender; used oftener of a tailor than of a cobbler. Cf. Coriolanus, II. 1. 98.

55. syllogism, form of reasoning.

61. mispriſion, mistake; see G.

62. cucullus non facit monachum, "a cowl does not make a monk" (a common proverb); so, though the Clown wore a Fool's dress (=motley; see G.), yet that did not make him a fool as regards his brain. The Elizabethan Fool had a suit of red and yellow alternately; a hood (caricaturing the monk's cowl) with an ass's ears and a cock's crest; and a "bauble" or mock-sceptre ending in a fool's head.

66. dexteriously; the Clown's mistake for dexterously ("adroitly").

69. good my mouse; the pronoun is often transposed thus in short phrases of address. mouse, a term of endearment; cf. Hamlet, III. 4. 183, "call you his mouse."

70. idleness, frivolous occupation.

84. God send you, sir. The Clown's wishes are fulfilled sooner than he anticipates.

86. pass his word, pledge his word. Cf. Titus Andronicus, I. 468, "I have passed my word and promise to the emperor."

89—96. I marvel...zanies. The Clown does not forget this speech, and Malvolio will have occasion to recall it (v. 382—384).

90. barren, i.e. of brains = 'dull.'

put down with, i.e. by; with = by is common in Shakespeare.

93. out of his guard, off his guard: metaphor of fencing.

94. minister occasion, supply him with a topic of jesting.

94, 95. I protest, I take. Really a reproof to Olivia for praising the Clown (80), and indeed for keeping him at all. Olivia in her reply snubs Malvolio for his implied impertinence.

I take...no better, I value, regard them as no better.

95. these kind; cf. those...number in I. 2. 10, and Lear, II. 2. 107, "these kind of knaves." The pronoun is 'attracted' to the plural idea of the whole phrase. set, professional, kept for the purpose of jesting.

96. zanies, stupid imitators; see G.

97. sick of self-love. A noticeable phrase; it describes the failing in Malvolio's character so precisely.

100. The bird-bolt was a short arrow; see G.

Olivia means that Malvolio takes things too seriously—a common failing with people who have no sense of humour.

101—104. There is no slander.... ‘Just as a professional fool is privileged (“allowed”) to say what he likes, so is a discreet man privileged to reprove as much as he likes: the one will not be accused of slander, nor the other of railing.’ A sarcastic hit at Malvolio who is certainly “discreet” and inclined to “reprove.”

The Elizabethan Jester was allowed to joke at the expense of his superiors (like the Fool in King Lear) but with tact, as Viola says (III. i. 67—74). And of course he made puns.

105, 106. Mercury, the patron deity of lying. leasing, the practice of telling lies, falsehood; see G. The Clown hints that Olivia has spoken well of fools at the expense of truth.

108. much desires; understand who; cf. 123 and see p. 167.

109. From the Count? She has had so many messages from Orsino.

111. well attended; cf. Orsino's directions in the last Scene (36, 37).

115. speaks...madman. Cf. Henry V., v. 2. 156, “I speak to thee plain soldier,” i. e. in the style of one. The accusative is cognate, as in ‘play the madman.’

122, 123. here he comes, one of thy kin, has. So many editors read. The Folios have a full stop after comes. has, i. e. who has.

123. pia mater, brain; properly the inner membrane covering the brain, the exterior one (of firmer texture) being called the dura mater.

129. sot; ‘stupid fellow, fool’; cf. F. sot, foolish. In modern English sot is a more offensive word, implying drunkenness, than in Shakespeare. these...herring; cf. salmon, trout used as plurals.

137. it's all one; cf. v. 201, 416; ‘it's all the same.’

140. heat, thirst; above heat, more than thirst requires.

141. Cf. Richard II., v. 5. 61, “This music mads me” (maddens).

142, 143. crownier, coroner; see G. sit on, hold an inquest on.

149. takes on him to understand, pretends to know.

157. “At the doors of sheriffs usually posts were set up, on which proclamations were fixed,” and which served to denote an official residence. Often they were ornamental, too, being carved and painted.

166. squash, unripe peascod (=the pod that holds the peas).

167. codling, any unripe apple; now=a special kind of apple.

168. in standing water. Some editors read e'en for in. The metaphor of the sea between ebb and flood implies an intermediate state; "at the turn of the tide." Cf. The Tempest, II. i. 221.

169. well-favoured, good-looking; see G. The description apparently influences Olivia and leads her to admit the messenger.

170. shrewishly, sharply, i. e. like a shrew (a scolding woman).

171. were scarce out; perhaps the verb is 'attracted' to the subjunctive mood of the previous verb "one would think."

181—188. The Elizabethan courtier's fanciful, euphuistic style.

186. con, learn by heart, as an actor his speeches; cf. Wordsworth, Ode on Intimations of Immortality, 102, "The little actor cons another part." The metaphor of the stage is kept up in "out of my part" = actor's rôle (191), "comedian" (194), "that I play" (197).

187, 188. comptible, sensitive. sinister usage, courtesy.

195. heart; a friendly form of address; cf. II. 3. 16, 110.

197. I am not that I play; an allusion which the audience (but not Olivia) understands.

200. She "usurps" herself in not giving herself to Orsino.

201. this is from, away from, not part of, my message.

204. forgive you the praise, excuse you from saying it.

207, 208. poetical — feigned. Cf. As You Like It, III. 3. 20, "the truest poetry is the most feigning"; but there feign has the good sense 'imagination,' while here 'pretence' is implied.

211. If you be not mad. See the Foliis; many editors omit not. Retaining not, I think that the passage illustrates what Cowden Clarke in his note on it terms Shakespeare's "apparent antitheses." Olivia seems to be speaking hurriedly, and she may think that there is some antithesis between if you be not mad and if you have reason, though really the antithesis is one of sound, not sense. What she says comes to this—"if you have any sense, go, or, at least, be brief." To omit not gives a more logical sense; but people speaking under the influence of excitement are not always logical. Errors of this kind are often much truer to human nature than their corrections.

213. not that time of moon, I am not in the humour to.

214. skipping, flighty, sippant.

217. swabber; a sailor who washes the deck of a vessel with a swab or mop; cf. The Tempest, II. 2. 48, "The master, the swabber, the boatswain and I." Perhaps the word is applied to Maria because she tried to clear Viola out of the room, by hinting to her to go, just as a swabber clears the deck. At any rate, the nautical metaphor (cf. "hull") was due to Maria's "hoist sail." hull, float; see G.

218. some mollification for; ‘pray pacify your giant here,’ a satirical reference to the height of Maria (“the little villain,” II. 5. 16), and possibly an allusion to the fact that in old romances and fairy tales the heroines are often protected by giants.

223. your office, what you were commissioned to say.

224. It alone, i.e. it concerns your ear alone.

225. taxation, demand, claim.

226. olive; the traditional symbol of peace.

231. entertainment, reception (viz. by Sir Toby, Malvolio, Maria).

239. comfortable, comforting; see G.

252. Such a one I was this present; so the Folios read—if rightly, with the sense (it seems), ‘that is how I looked a moment ago,’ i.e. before she veiled herself at Viola’s entrance. Perhaps the best emendation is, “as this presents”=‘represents’; but Shakespeare elsewhere uses the phrase this present=‘the present time, this moment.’ Herford says: “this picture shews what I was all this time.”

254. if God did all, if it is all natural, not painted. Shakespeare often refers to the practice of painting the face; cf. Hamlet, v. 1. 213.

255. ’Tis in grain, it is dyed with a fast colour. Some explain, ‘it is natural, ingrained.’ See G.

258. cunning; used by Shak. often in the good sense ‘skilful.’

259—261. A favourite idea of Elizabethan poets, that those who possess personal beauty should marry and through their children enable that beauty to remain in the world instead of dying out. Shakespeare’s Sonnets 1—17 treat this theme under different metaphors, that of a “copy” (261) or reprint occurring in Sonnet 11.

259. she, woman; cf. As You Like It, III. 2. 10, “The fair, the chaste and unexpressive she.” So he=man; cf. 3 Henry VI., I. 1. 46.

262—268. A compliment is embarrassing to a refined and sensitive person. Note with what good taste Olivia turns aside Viola’s pretty speeches, feigning a half-sarcastic indifference and self-depreciation.

263. schedules, lists, inventories; a legal word (see IV. 1. 36).

265. labelled to my will, appended to my will and testament.

266. gray; then a favourite colour for women’s eyes. Chaucer’s Prioresse had “eyen greye as glas” (a phrase that became proverbial). The Elizabethans disliked very dark eyes or hair in women; Shakespeare alludes to this prejudice often; see especially Sonnet 127.

268. praise, in both senses ‘commend’ and ‘appraise, estimate.’

269. I see you what you are; cf. I. 2. 53, note.

271—273. i.e. his love is so great that the fairest woman could but give him a reward such as he well deserves. The emphatic word is recompensed; cf. 304.

273. the nonpareil of, the peerless queen, the paragon of; see G.

274. A short line, of four accents, either through the dropping out of some word (e.g. a second with), or purposely—such lines being found “where a number of short clauses or epithets are connected together in one line, and must be pronounced slowly” (Abbott).

275. Cf. the picture in As You Like It, II. 7. 148, of the lover “sighing like furnace.” See II. 2. 40, 4. 64—66.

276—282. Orsino resembles Olivia too much to attract her; thus his sentimental love is like her sentimental grief. Attraction lies rather in opposite qualities.

279. in voices well divulged, well spoken of by people.

280, 281. dimension, body, person; cf. v. 244. gracious, attractive.

283. in my master's flame, with my master's ardent passion.

287. Make me, for me (myself). willow; a symbol of unhappy love; cf. the old ballad “Sing willow, willow,” Othello, IV. 3. 41—56.

289. cantons, songs; see G.

291. reverberate, resounding; literally ‘made to resound.’ For the participial termination -ate=-ated see distract in G.

293, 294. i.e. her name should be echoed from earth to air.

295. Note how the vehemence of Viola's outburst impresses Olivia.

300. you; said with some emphasis.

303. feed post, paid messenger.

305. i.e. ‘may love make the heart of that man whom.’ Viola's wish, we shall see, is fulfilled.

that; the antecedent is contained in his (=‘of him’); cf. III. 1. 69.

make; the optative or imperative use of the subjunctive was commoner then than now. Cf. “be this”=“may this be,” 330.

307. cruelty, cruel person. Abstract used for concrete; cf. conduct=conductor, diligence=diligent servant, The Tempest, V. 244, 241.

310. Sir Toby too sees that Viola is well-born (III. 4. 203).

312. do give thee...blazon, serve as a coat of arms to thee, i.e. as a sign of high birth; see G. Why fivefold?

313. unless. The sense seems to be ‘if only the master were’; or perhaps she is saying to herself “I could never marry Orsino,” and then adds aloud “unless the master were the man,” i.e. unless they could be exchanged. The sentence is purposely left incomplete, only bits of her thoughts being given us.

315. perfections; for its sense and scansion cf. I. 1. 39, note.

315. feel...to creep; cf. III. i. 120, "hear you to solicit." Verbs of perception, 'feel,' 'see,' 'hear,' are often followed by to in Shak.

319. peevish, saucy; see G. She misleads Malvolio purposely.

320. county's, count's; see G. The Folios have countes or counts.

324, 325. She half tells him to bid Viola (as he does) come again.

329. owe, possess and so 'have control of'; see G.

Young students sometimes misunderstand Viola's position as a "page" and picture Olivia wooing "a page-boy." It may not be amiss therefore to give Dr Murray's definition of "page" in its courtly sense: "A youth employed as the personal attendant of a person of rank. In earlier times often himself of gentle birth [cf. 297, 298] and placed in this position in order to be trained in the usages of good society." Cesario is a "page" in that sense; the equal of Valentine and Curio ("gentlemen attending on the Duke"), though not the equal of the Duke or Countess.

ACT II.

Scene 1.

I. nor...not; the double negative expresses his emphatic entreaty.

3. my stars shine darkly, fortune is unkind to me; see I. 3. 142.

4. malignancy, malevolence; see G.

5. distemper, put out of temper, make ill-humoured.

II. sooth, truly, indeed; see G.

12. determinate, resolved upon. extravagancy, vagrancy. Cf. extravagant used in its literal sense 'wandering,' Othello, L. I. 137. Lat. extra, 'beyond,' + vagari, 'to wander.'

13. touch of modesty, i.e. strain, trait, of modesty.

15. it charges me in manners, I am obliged as a matter of courtesy.

16. to express myself, to make myself known.

You must know. This account is intended to let the audience know more about Viola and Sebastian and the shipwreck. One of the difficulties of a dramatist is to give information necessary to the understanding of the plot and yet to do it in an indirect way, so that the spectators shall not feel that they are being instructed. When the audience are conscious that the action of the play is brought to a standstill so that the circumstances of the plot may be explained, then the illusion is destroyed.

18. Messaline, an imaginary locality; Capell proposed Mitylene.

19. you have heard of. Sebastian's father was so well known.
21. in an hour, i.e. in one hour. It is generally after a preposition that a or an = 'one'; cf. Othello, II. 3. 212, "both at a birth."
22. Cf. Comedy of Errors, III. I. 122, "I'll meet you...some hour hence," i.e. about an hour. This use of some with a singular noun of time may arise through its use before numerals as in "some sixteen months," Two Gentlemen of Verona, IV. I. 21. (Abbott, p. 30.)
23. breach, surf; or perhaps the place where the waves break.
27. She much resembled me. This is said so as to prepare the audience for the likeness between Viola and Sebastian.
- was yet*, i.e. who was; see I. 5. 108, note.
- of many*; of = 'by' is common in Shakespeare after passive verbs.
28. Most editors take estimable = 'esteeming,' and wonder = 'admiration,' and interpret, 'with so high a degree of admiration.' Cf. deceivable = 'deceiving,' IV. 3. 21. It seems to me not impossible that estimable wonder = 'wonder of estimation,' i.e. excessive admiration; like civil bounds = 'bounds of civility,' I. 4. 21.
- over-far believe*, go too far and believe. Sebastian wishes to undo the compliment which he paid himself when he said that his sister was considered very like him—and beautiful.
34. He makes this apology, having learnt Sebastian's high rank.
35. your trouble, the trouble caused to you.
- 36, 37. Antonio loves Sebastian so much that to be refused permission to accompany him will be like a death-blow.
41. kindness, tenderness. I am yet, i.e. still; he has not recovered from the loss of his sister.
42. "And all my mother came into mine eyes
And gave me up to tears" (Henry V., IV. 6. 31, 32).
46. I have many enemies; this is explained later (III. 3. 26—37).

Scene 2.

5. this ring. See I. 5. 320, 321.
6. to have taken, by having taken: a gerund, not infinitive.
9. She will none of; see I. 3. 113, note.
12. taking of this, receiving of the ring back. That was not exactly the point as to which Olivia wanted to see Orsino's messenger again; cf. I. 5. 324, 325.
13. the ring. Some editors read "no ring"; but Viola dissembles because she instinctively guesses Olivia's secret (cf. 18—42), and wishes to conceal it from Malvolio. If she said “no ring,” his suspicions might be roused. Viola’s love of Orsino, and her woman’s quickness, enable her to read the symptoms of love in others.

- 15. so returned, i.e. in the same way, viz. thrown on the ground.
- 16. in your eye, in your sight, right before you.
- 19. forbid...not; a negative after a verb expressing negation, as in French. Cf. Richard III., I. 3. 90, “You may deny that you were not the cause” (i.e. that you were). The idiom springs from the same love of emphasis that gives us the double negative (II. I. 1).
- 21. lost, caused her to lose control of.
- 27. she were better; see I. 5. 34, note.
- 29. the pregnant enemy, the ever-ready foe of man, viz. Satan. Cf. III. 4. 109, and Macbeth, III. I. 69, “the common enemy of man.” The name Satan means ‘adversary’.
- 30. the proper-false, men who are at once handsome (“proper”) and deceitful; cf. beauteous-evil, III. 4. 403. Compound adjectives, in which the first adj. qualifies the second adverbially, are not uncommon in Shakespeare; cf. ‘daring-hardy’ in Richard II., I. 3. 43, ‘childish-foolish’ in Richard III., I. 3. 142.
- 31. set their forms, stamp their image; the metaphor of sealing (cf. waxen = ‘soft, impressible’).
- 33. The Folios read “are made, if such we bee.” be, see G.
- 34. fadge, turn out, prosper; see G.
- 35. fond; probably a verb = ‘dote’; but am might be understood.
- 37—40. As a page, she is fatal to Orsino’s prospect of winning Olivia’s love: as a woman, she will make Olivia sigh all in vain.

Scene 3.

The time of this Scene is the night of the same day as the last Scene. Cf. 143, “the youth of the count’s was today with my lady.”

- 2. betimes, early; literally by time.
- ‘diluculo surgere, i.e. saluberrimum est, “to rise early is most healthful”—a maxim quoted from Lilly’s Latin Grammar. This was a school-book in general use during Shakespeare’s life, and, no doubt, he had learnt from it as a boy at Stratford Grammar School. Every educated man in Shakespeare’s audience would know the maxim, so we can imagine the laugh at Sir Andrew’s reply, “Nay...I know not,” and Sir Toby’s flattering “Thou’rt a scholar” (13).
- 7. can, vessel to hold wine or ale.

10. elements; see G. Sir Toby was going to suggest that they should replenish the liquid "element" in them.

14. Marian. So the Folios; some editors read Maria (cf. 129). The change is not necessary; Malvolio calls her Mary in one place (130), Maria in another (II. 5. 27). Marian is a form of Maria or Mary. stoop, or stoop, a drinking cup, flagon; Dutch stoop, 'a large cup.'

16. my hearts, my good friends; cf. 110 and see I. 5. 195, note.

17. "I believe Shakespeare had in his thoughts a common sign [i.e. sign-board of an inn], in which two wooden heads are exhibited, with this inscription under it, 'We three loggerheads be' [i.e. fools]. The spectator or reader is supposed to make the third. The Clown means to insinuate, that Sir Toby and Sir Andrew had as good a title to the name of fool as himself."—Malone.

18, 19. catch, part-song, glee; see G. breast, voice; see G.

20. See v. 180, and cf. Merry Wives of Windsor, I. 1. 205, "I had rather than forty shillings I had my Book of Songs here." Note that forty is used constantly by Elizabethans as a significant number, where no precise reckoning is needed. Cf. Sonnet 2, "When forty winters shall besiege thy brow," and Coriolanus, III. 1. 243, "I could beat forty of them." I have no doubt that this use arose from the fact that forty is a mysterious number in Scripture, and associated with many great events. Thus the wanderings of the Israelites lasted forty years, the fast of our Lord forty days—likewise the fast of Elijah (I Kings xix. 8), and the stay of Moses on the Mount (Exodus xxiv. 18).

23—25. Pigromonitus. Much that the Clown says is intentional nonsense, one point of which is that it ridicules the use of affected, stilted language. As to his trick of bringing in long imaginary names, perhaps to impress Sir Andrew, see I. 5. 39, note. Some critics find in it an imitation of Rabelais.

26. leman, sweetheart; the Folios lemon; a certain correction.

27—29. impeticos thy gratility; he may have meant impeticoat thy gratuity, i.e. put your gift in my pocket. These domestic Fools often wore long coats which might be humourously called 'petticoats.' But the whole speech is mere "fooling"—as even Sir Andrew sees. whipstock, the handle of a whip. Perhaps there is a hint that Malvolio is sharp at scenting out things.

Myrmidons; a race of warriors who followed Achilles to the Trojan war; used colloquially='followers or ministers' e.g. legal officers.

31. when all is done, after all.

34. testrii, sixpence; see G. of, from.

35. "If one knight gives, another should." Either these words have dropped out in the printing or the Clown interrupted Sir Andrew.

37. of good life, i.e. a song of a sober moral kind.

40—53. This Song is found in Morley's Consort Lessons, printed in 1599, i.e. before the probable date of Twelfth Night. Most likely it was an old ballad not composed by Shakespeare; popular ballads were then often introduced thus into plays. But possibly Shakespeare was the author and re-used the song when he came to write this play.

We may note here the number of songs referred to in this Scene, especially in 76—110. The constant mention or introduction of ballads old and new is a marked feature of the Elizabethan drama. A great quantity of these ballads has survived in popular song-books and collections of airs. They support other evidence which shows that in Shakespeare's time the English were a very musical race, and that a knowledge of music was widespread. Some think that Puritanism (e.g. by its hostility to Church music) had much to do with the decline of music in England as a national taste and recreation. Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry gives versions of several of the songs in Twelfth Night. Dramatically the great feature of the songs in Shakespeare's plays is their appropriateness to their context.

43. sweeting, sweet one; cf. Othello II. 3. 252, "All's well, sweeting."

51. i.e. delay leads to no good.

52. sweet and twenty, probably a term of endearment, literally = 'twenty times sweet.' But some explain it 'give me sweet kisses and twenty of them; others as formed like 'sweet seventeen' (years understood).

55. Sir Toby, it seems, talks so absurdly to lead Sir Andrew on to talk equally, or more, absurdly.

59. make the welkin dance, "drink till the sky seems to turn round" (Johnson). welkin, see G.

61. In Much Ado II. 3. 59—61, when Balthasar plays on the lute, Benedick says, "now is his soul ravish'd," and then remarks how strange it is that music "should hale [= "draw"] souls out of men's bodies," i.e. should affect them so strongly. This "catch" is to be so good that even a Puritanical psalm-singing weaver would be transported by it: not one soul, but three, would be "haled from his body" (a touch of exaggeration, to emphasise the charming effect of the music). Sir Toby chooses a weaver because Elizabethan weavers were proverbial for their love of psalms and hymns (the very opposite of catches!); many were Calvinist refugees from the Netherlands. See I Hen. IV. II. 4. 145, 146: "I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms."

64. dog at, clever at. 65. lady; the Virgin Mary.

68. Thou knave; this catch of two lines is found in a musical collection Pammelia, 1609. Like most catches (see G.), it has a comic effect, the parts being so distributed that each singer should call the other "knaves" in turn.

80. a Cataian; a term of reproach, like "heathen Chinee"; see G.

81. Peg-a-Ramsey; the title of an Elizabethan song, only the tune of which is extant. If we knew the words, we might see the point of Sir Toby's remark, unless it is intentional nonsense. See p. 146.

"Three merry men be we"; the refrain or 'burden' of several old ballads; it is often quoted in Elizabethan plays. be, see G.

83. Tilly-vally, stuff! nonsense! See G. lady! a satirical echo of "my lady" in Maria's speech; it suggests to Sir Toby the line of the song in which "lady, lady" occurs. This song was The Constancy of Susanna, of which Mercutio sings this scrap in Romeo and Juliet, II.

4. 151. There were many old ballads about characters of the Old Testament and Apocrypha, e.g. "Jeptha, Judge of Israel" (Hamlet, II. 2).

91. "O, the twelfth day"; the beginning of a lost ballad; doubtless, it celebrated some battle or event that occurred on December 12. Old ballads often begin thus by mentioning the season in which the event described took place; cf. The Boy and the Mantle, in Percy's Reliques:

"In the third day of May,

To Carleile did come."

94. honesty, decency, the sense of what is proper (=Lat. honestus).

95. tinkers; proverbial drinkers and talkers; cf. I Henry IV, II.

4. 19, 20, "I can drink with any tinker in his own language."

97, 98. coziers, cobblers; see G. remorse, pity, sparing.

101. sneck (or snick) up! a slang phrase = 'go and be hanged.'

102. round, plain-spoken: "be round with him!" Hamlet, III. 4. 5.

103. harbours you, shelters you, allows you to live here.

104. allied; a sort of quibble: 'though she is connected with you, she has no connection (i.e. no sympathy) with your disorderly ways.'

105. separate yourself from, i.e. give them up.

110. "Farewell, dear heart." This and the following lines printed as quotations are adapted from a ballad Corydon's Farewell to Phillis.

113. "His eyes do show." Possibly the Clown as he makes the quotation intends a sly allusion to Sir Toby's intoxicated state. Cf. v. 205 ("his eyes were set").

114. Is't even so, is it possible that you can misbehave so?

122. Out o' tune, sir. Said to Malvolio, in reference to his sneers at their singing, more especially at its want of melody (cf. "ye squeak"). Many editors substitute time for tune; cf. Malvolio's "no respect of time in you" (99), and Sir Toby's "We did keep time" (100). But the change is not necessary: indeed, it makes almost too subtle a point, seeing that the knight is half-intoxicated and would not be likely to remember what exactly Malvolio had said. He only recollects in a vague way that their singing had been spoken of contemptuously.

134. cakes and ale, jollity, revelling; suggesting then the Church feast-days and public holidays, so disliked by Puritans. See p. 146.

126. Saint Anne. The mother of the Virgin Mary. He swears by a Saint to annoy the Puritan (152) Malvolio. Puritans much disliked the invocation of Saints as savouring of Roman Catholicism.

ginger; used to spice ale with.

129. In Elizabethan households the steward wore a chain of gold or silver as a badge of office; it was usually cleaned with bread-crumbs.

131. rule, according to most editors, 'conduct, behaviour'; see G.

134. go shake your ears; a common expression of contempt.

136. challenge him the field, i.e. to a duel. field=combat.

145. gull him, fool him; the gull was thought to be a stupid bird.

146. nayword, byword; see G. recreation, laughing-stock.

149. possess us, inform us.

152. puritan, with Shakespeare never a flattering term.

160. time-pleaser, time-server, one who suits his principles to his interests, e.g. by pleasing the powers that be (in this case Olivia).

affectioned, affected; see p. 162.

161. cons state; some explain 'studies a dignified deportment,' but this hardly suits "utters." I think that the reference is to Malvolio's pompous conversation; he learns up "arguments of state" (II. 5. 163) and brings forth fine, carefully studied sentences on state-affairs. See p. 146.

162. swarths, i.e. swaths; literally rows of mown grass. Here a figurative expression = 'by the yard' (in colloquial English).

the best persuaded, with the highest opinion of himself.

164. his grounds of faith, his firm belief; some read ground.

165. that vice, that flaw, weakness, i.e. Malvolio's vanity.

169. some epistles; contrast the letter in II. 5. Perhaps Maria got afraid lest she should offend Olivia, who respected Malvolio much. She writes, as we shall see, a letter which is so vague that she could pretend (if necessary) that it did not refer to Malvolio. No doubt, she was jealous of his influence with Olivia.

173. feelingly personated, accurately portrayed.

174. on a forgotten matter, when the writing relates to something that happened long since.

184. Ass, I doubt not; perhaps punning on “As I doubt not.” The quibble on ass and as occurs in Hamlet, v. 2. 43.

188. will work with him, i.e. take effect on; cf. II. 5. 215.

190. his construction of it, how he construes, i.e. interprets, it; cf. III. 1. 126.

193. Penthesilea; queen of the Amazons, a race (in classical mythology) of female warriors; here a title of admiration, applied humorously to the diminutive Maria (cf. “giant,” I. 5. 218).

194. Before me, by my soul; this use of before arose from the expletive before God!

195. beagle, a small kind of hound.

201. I am...out; cf. our slang phrase ‘out of it’: i.e. if he spends his money and does not win (“recover”) Olivia.

203. call me cut, call me a fool; a common phrase.

206. Burnt sack was wine heated or ‘mulled.’ Sack, see G.

Scene 4.

A delightful feature in Twelfth Night is the happy union of comedy and romance: we pass so easily from the one to the other. Here for instance how effective is the transition from the rollicking geniality of Sir Toby and his boon companions to the romance and gentle sentiment of Orsino and his court. The contrast between Scenes 3 and 4 heightens the effectiveness of each.

1. Cf. the beginning of the first Scene of the play. The time of action is evidently the morning (“good morrow, friends”).

2. but, just, i.e. let me hear just.

3. Scan antique, as always in Shakespeare; = ‘old-fashioned.’

4. passion, feeling, i.e. of love.

5. recollected=carefully culled and so ‘studied.’ Orsino contrasts the artificial language (“terms”) of present songs with the simple style of this “antique” ballad.

11. Feste, the jester. It seems a little odd that the Clown should be so much at Orsino’s palace. But we saw in Act 1 (Sc. 5) that he absented himself often; probably Olivia’s house was rather dull (despite Sir Toby), what with her mourning and Malvolio’s fault-finding.

18. motions, emotions; cf. 101.

21. to the seat, i.e. to the heart; cf. I. 1. 37, 38.

25. stayed upon, rested on lingeringly. favour, face; see G.

26. by your favour. A quibble on the two senses (1) ‘with your good pleasure,’ (2) ‘on your face’ (by=‘near,’ its original sense).

27. complexion, appearance, looks; not merely ‘colour of the face.’

30, 31. Perhaps Shakespeare was thinking of his own case. Anne Hathaway whom he married was his senior by several years.

31. wears to him; as a garment gets to fit its wearer.

32. sways level; as a balance maintains its equilibrium; she does not descend in her husband’s affection—keeps a steady place in it.

33—36. Contrast 98—106.

34. fancies, loves, as in I. i. 14.

35. worn, i.e. worn out; won is a needless change.

38. hold the bent; as a bent bow keeps the same strain.

42—49. An allusion to marriage. spinsters; in its literal sense ‘spinners.’ free; happy, careless. bones, bobbins made of bone; a bobbin is a pin on which thread is wound. Katherine of Arragon is said to have introduced pillow-lace making (“bone lace”) in Bedfordshire. silly sooth, plain, simple truth. sooth; see G. old age, “the ages past, the times of simplicity.”

52. Come away, come here, come to me.

53. Cypress; either (1) a shroud made of the crape-stuff called cypress (see G.), or (2) a coffin of cypress-wood. Probably (2) is right, because the shroud is mentioned just after, and it was white, whereas this crape was usually black. Cypress-wood (which is very dark—cf. “black” in 61) was used for coffins; to which it was customary to tie bunches of yew and rosemary.

69. There’s for thy pains; Orsino gives him money.

72. paid, i.e. paid for, suffered for.

74. Give me leave; a polite and playful way of dismissing the Clown by reversing their relative positions.

75. the melancholy god, i.e. Saturn; cf. saturnine, ‘morose.’

77. taffeta, shot silk, the hue of which varies with the light; hence a symbol of changeableness, as is the opal, a stone that reflects different colours. The Clown thinks that Orsino’s outward garb should harmonise with his changeable character.

80. intent, direction, aim. be everywhere, i.e. constantly change.

83. cruelty; see I. 5. 307.

86. parts, endowments of wealth, position etc.

87. hold, value. as giddily, as lightly.

88, 89. i.e. it is her beautiful person, form, that attracts me. pranks, adorns; see G. attracts, i.e. that attracts.

92. Note from this point to the end of the Scene the touches of that "irony" mentioned on p. 97—how Viola's remarks and Orsino's have for the audience a significance that is hidden from Orsino.

95. be answer'd, i.e. acquiesce in that answer.

96. There is...sides. A singular verb preceding a plural subject is common in Shakespeare, especially with the phrase 'There is.' Cf. Cymbeline, IV. 2. 371, "There is no more such masters." Coming first, before the plural subject has been mentioned, the singular verb appears less unnatural. 97. Can, i.e. which can.

99. to hold, i.e. as to hold; Shak. often omits as after so. Cf. Macbeth, II. 3. 55, "I'll make so bold to call." retention, capacity to keep.

100—104. Observe how the same metaphor is carried through the passage—"appetite," "palate," "surfeit," "cloyment," "hungry," "digest." One of the great distinctions between Shakespeare's early and later styles is his use of metaphor. In the early plays he will often take a single metaphor and keep to it; in his later plays, the outcome of a richer, completely developed imagination, he gives us variety of imagery, just touching perhaps on one metaphor, and then passing to another and yet another. A metaphor worked out in detail is apt to obscure or lose the original point of comparison.

101. motion, impulse. liver; see I. 1. 37, note. but the palate, i.e. but of the palate. Their love is mere taste for, not hungry desire of.

102. That suffer; the plural antecedent of that is contained in their = 'of those' (100); cf. I. 5. 305, note. cloyment, surfeit, satiety.

103. as the sea; cf. I. 1. 11.

104. compare, comparison; often in Shakespeare and Milton.

106. owe, feel towards; see G.

110. loved, i.e. who loved; see I. 5. 108, note.

113. blank; the metaphor of a sheet of paper not written on.

114. a worm, i.e. a canker; cf. Milton, Lycidas, 45, "As killing as the canker to the rose."

115. damask, rosy (see G.); "bud" suggested the idea of the rose.

116. green...yellow; indicating sickness and grief respectively.

117, 118. One often sees emblematical figures on tomb-stones. A figure of Patience, symbolising the patient resignation of those who have erected the monument, is a natural emblem.

The words smiling at grief probably qualify She; not Patience, the sense being, as Boswell says: "While she was smiling at grief, her placid resignation made her look like Patience on a monument." smiling at; the notion of half submitting to a thing, half scorning it.

A very similar comparison and personification of Patience occur in Pericles, v. i. 139.

like Patience on a monument; one of the phrases in Twelfth Night that have become proverbial; for others note "greatness thrust upon them" (ii. 5. 158)—"the whirligig of time" (v. 385). Almost all Shakespeare's plays (especially Hamlet) have enriched our language with proverbial sayings.

120, 121. i.e. we make great professions of love, but lack the will to carry them out.

123. When she says, 'I, your page-boy, am the only daughter left,' Orsino naturally concludes that the sister did die, and that Viola puts the fact in this indirect way so as to hide her grief. Viola misleads him without actually saying anything untrue.

124. I know not; said aside; she hopes that Sebastian was saved.

127. give...place, yield, withdraw. denay, denial; used (only here) for the rhyme. Cf. Spenser, Faerie Queene, vi. ii. 15, "That with great rage he stoutly doth denay" (rhyming with lay and pay).

Scene 5.

2. a scruple of, the least bit of.

6. sheep-biter; here—"a morose, surly and malicious fellow" (Schmidt); commonly a slang term for a thief. come by, receive; the notion is 'to come near' (by) a thing, and so attain it.

9. bear-baiting, the pastime of setting on dogs to bait or worry a bear tied to a stake (iii. 1. 129, 130); much disliked by the Puritans, hence distasteful to Malvolio, "a kind of Puritan" (ii. 3. 152). Scott describes it vividly in Kenilworth, xvii. 14. pity of, a bad thing for.

17. my metal of India, my little jewel, my girl of gold. Gold was proverbially associated with India; cf. Dekker's Old Fortunatus (1600), i. 1, "It's gold sure...an Indian mine." The 1st Folio, as often, prints mettle, a form of metal. The 2nd Folio has nettle, indicating perhaps that Maria would make Malvolio smart with annoyance.

23. close! hide yourselves!

26. with tickling. Country-bred boys know how easily trout are caught thus in the summer, when the water in small streams runs low.

Exit Maria. It is curious, I think, that Maria does not stop to see how her plan succeeds. Perhaps she has to attend Olivia.

Enter Malvolio. Note how Malvolio is precisely in the frame of mind which will make him fall an easy victim to the plot. He is thinking of Olivia (thus he merely says "she," and does not mention her name). Perhaps Olivia has just shown him some mark of favour. At any rate, he is musing on her partiality for him and thanking his "fortune." And then, in this affected mood, he finds the letter which confirms his delusions, even to the extent of bidding him "touch fortune's fingers" (171).

To attribute thus a particular mood to a character in view of what is coming is a common device of dramatists. Thus at the beginning of The Merchant of Venice Antonio is sad. Nothing in his circumstances accounts for his melancholy. This mood is attributed to him merely as a means of foreshadowing the misfortunes that impend. A dramatist naturally arranges the outset of a scene in such a way as to give the best dramatic effect of harmony or contrast with what follows.

- 28. she, i.e. Olivia. affect me, care for me.
- 36. jets, struts; see G. advanced, puffed up.
- 38. 'Slight, an abbreviation of the oath God's light; oaths naturally get curtailed—cf. 'slid, III. 4. 427, 'sblood.

45. the Strachy; the Strachy family (?). Most likely an allusion, then clear, to a lady of rank who had married a servant—either in real life or in some popular play or novel (cf. v. 121, note). None of the attempted explanations helps us much, though there is ingenuity in the suggestion that Strachy is a corruption of Stratici from Greek στρατικός ('general'), then (it is said) a title of magistrates and governors in many parts of Italy: if this were so, the phrase would mean "the Governor's widow," and the reference might be to some Italian novel in which such a marriage as Malvolio describes had occurred.

"Yeoman of the wardrobe" was the title of one of the superior servants in great Elizabethan households. yeoman, see G.

46. Jesebel; an absurd reproach to apply to a man; but Sir Andrew is the speaker. Cf. Sir Toby's firago III. 4. 302.

47. deeply in; the metaphor of sinking deep into mud.

48. blows him, makes him swell with pride.

50. state, chair of state. Malvolio now sits down on some garden-seat and enacts the imaginary scene with his "officers" and "Toby." He pictures himself (the ex-servant) remaining seated while Sir Toby (the knight) stands meekly in his presence and receives the reprimand. About line 90 we must imagine Malvolio to rise from his "state," stroll up and down, and suddenly notice the letter (cf. 91 "What employment?" etc.). So the Scene is commonly represented on the stage.

51. stone-bow, a cross-bow from which stones or bullets were thrown. Cf. The Book of Wisdom v. 22, "hailstones full of wrath shall be cast as out of a stone-bow."

54. branched, ornamented with designs of leaves and flowers; cf. 'flowered' as applied to silks etc. designed with patterns of flowers.

58. the humour of state, the air of a great personage.

59. travel of regard, i.e. after letting my look pass slowly from one to another. Cf. F. regard, look.

61. my kinsman Toby. His familiarity in dropping the 'Sir' and claim of kinship (through Olivia) cannot fail to rouse Sir Toby.

66. "Pocket-watches were brought from Germany into England about 1580"—Malone. See v. 166.

with my—some rich jewel. Probably he meant to say chain (II. 3. 129), but remembered that he would be a steward no longer.

71. with cars; we should say, 'with wild horses'; cf. Two Gentlemen of Verona, III. 1. 265, 266, "a team of horse shall not pluck that from me," i.e. his secret. Needless changes have been proposed, as by th' ears.

74. control, authority.

75. Cf. Henry V., IV. 7. 133, "take him [deal him] a box o'th' ear."

91. employment, business: 'what's to be done here?'

92. woodcock; like the gull, typical of stupidity because thought to have no brains, and easily caught with "springes." gin, snare; see G.

94. i.e. 'and may the god of humour inspire him to read the letter out.' Sir Toby and the others have not seen Maria's letter (which differs much from what she intended to write—cf. II. 3. 169, note).

96, 97. C...P. Note that neither occurs in the address of the letter as read out by Malvolio. It has been suggested that the direction ended with the words, "with care present" (a common Elizabethan direction on the outside of letters), and that Malvolio omitted them.

97. in contempt of question, without doubt.

100. Why that? with his usual slowness, Sir Andrew does not see that Malvolio refers to the letter which he is studying.

103. Soft! stay: just as he is going to break the seal he notices its impressure=impression, mark; cf. expressure II. 3. 171.

104. Lucrece; the Roman matron Lucretia (wife of Tarquinus Collatinus), whose story is told in Shakespeare's early poem Lucrece. Her head was a common device of ladies' seals. See v. 341.

106. liver; see I. 1. 37, note.

111. numbers, metre; see G.

114. brock, badger; then a frequent term of contempt.

116. i.e. a knife such as that with which Lucrece stabbed herself. Shakespeare almost always accents Lucrece, as here.

119. fustian, nonsensical; see G.

123. What dish! what a dish! she, Maria.

124. stanic', kestrel; a species of falcon. The Folios have stallion; Hanmer corrected. A hawk checks "when she forsakes her proper game, and follows some other of inferior kind that crosses her in her flight." Cf. III. 1. 71. The number of hawking-terms which Shakespeare and other Elizabethans use shows how popular the sport was.

128. formal capacity, ordinary intelligence, average ability.

135. Sowter; name of a hound; properly 'a cobbler' (Lat. sutor). cry, "give tongue," as a hound does when it finds the scent.

136. though it be. Probably the sense is that Malvolio will continue his efforts to interpret the lines, "though the cheat is so gross that any one else would find it out"—Malone. A less egotistical man would be put on his guard by the plainness of the whole scheme.

140. A "fault" (in hunter's language) is when the scent fails.

141. no consonancy, what follows does not agree.

142. suffers under probation, will not bear looking into, testing.

144. O shall end; i.e. at the end Malvolio will have cause to say O! when he suffers for his presumption.

151, 152. simulation, disguise, counterfeiting. to crush this; i.e. with a little straining, it might be made to fit my name.

153, 154. every one...are; the verb is 'attracted' to the plural letters. Note how important a part in syntax 'attraction' plays—that is, the influence of one word, through either its grammatical form or its sense, upon another word in the sentence. Cf. I. 5. 171, note.

155. revolve, consider.

156. my stars, my fortunes; cf. 184, and see I. 3. 142, note.

157. born great; the Folios have become here, but born III. 4. 45.

161. slough, the skin cast off by a snake.

162. opposite; as we say, 'contrary.' a kinsman, i.e. Sir Toby.

163. tang, ring with; trwang (III. 4. 197) is another form. The sound tang suggests a loud, wearisome voice always at work.

164. singularity, affectation; a 'singular' person is often affected.

166. yellow stockings; much worn in England in the 16th century. Most people know the light yellow hose worn by the Blue-Coat boys, the style of whose school-dress has not been altered since the foundation of Christ's Hospital in 1553.

167. cross-garter'd; also an Elizabethan fashion. Steevens believes that it was especially popular with Puritans : if so, it would be appropriate to Malvolio (II. 3. 152). See p. 146.

172. alter, exchange (i.e. instead of his being her servant).

173. daylight and champaign, "broad day and an open country cannot make things plainer"—Warburton. champaign, see G.

discovers; the two subjects really convey one idea, 'openness.'

176. point-devise, exactly (see G.), i.e. as the letter described.

178. jade me, make a fool of me.

180. She did commend. We must suppose that Olivia did so to please Malvolio, and that Maria heard her, for really she disliked the colour and the fashion (cf. Maria's words 218—220). Or perhaps Malvolio imagines it all, being "in such a dream" (211).

184. strange, reserved, distant in manner; cf. IV. I. 16.

185. stout, proud; cf. 2 Henry VI., I. I. 187, "stout and proud."

185, 186. in yellow stockings...even with the swiftness of putting on. In the earlier Scenes of Twelfth Night (as commonly represented) Malvolio is dressed entirely in black, which harmonises with his austere, somewhat Puritanical character, and increases by force of contrast the absurdity of his guise when he next appears (III. 4).

189. entertainest, art willing to accept.

let it appear in thy smiling. This point struck the barrister John Manningham when he saw Twelfth Night acted in 1602 (see Introduction). In the representation of the play the incident may be made very amusing both here where Malvolio begins to practise "smiling," and more in III. 4 when he comes into Olivia's presence.

198. Sophy, the Shah of Persia; see G. In 1598 an English embassy under Sir Robert Shirley (the most illustrious perhaps of Elizabethan travellers) and his brother Sir Anthony reached Persia. Sir Robert stayed till 1607, but Sir Anthony returned to England in 1599. The embassy was the first sent out from this country to Persia and roused great interest; much was said about the splendour of the Persian Court and the liberality of the Shah. Shakespeare's audience would see his allusion at once. So in King Lear, III. 6. 85 ("Persian attire").

199. I could marry; see V. 370—372.

208. play, stake, tray-trip, "a game at dice, in which success depended upon throwing a trois" (i.e. a trey or three); perhaps like backgammon.

215. aqua-vita, ardent spirits, e.g. brandy. So the Irish usquebaugh= 'whiskey' means 'water of life.'

225. Tartar, Tartarus, a classical name of the infernal regions.

ACT III.

Scene 1.

The time of this Scene is the same morning as in the last. Viola is on her way to Olivia, as Orsino directed (II. 4. 83, 125—127).

1. Save thee, i.e. God save thee; cf. III. 4. 238.
2. tabor, a small drum used by clowns and jesters.
3. He quibbles on by = 'by means of' and 'close by, near.'
4. churchman, clergyman.
8. the king lies, i.e. dwells, a common use of lie.
12. You have said; a form of assent = 'well said, quite right'; generally, as here, ironical; cf. Othello, IV. 2. 204.

To see this age! how clever the world is nowadays!

13. cheveril, of kid leather; see G. A clever man can twist a remark into just the opposite sense to what was intended.

17. dally nicely, trifle in a subtle manner.
25. since bonds etc.; see p. 146 and Introduction, p. vii.
39. pilchards; small fish like herrings.
41. corrupter of words, punster, maker of word-plays.
42. I saw thee late; i.e. when the Clown sang the Song, "Come away, come away, death" (II. 4. 52).

43. the orb, the earth.
45. sorry but, i.e. sorry if not. Cf. 2 Henry IV., IV. 3. 33, "I would be sorry but it should be thus" = if it were not thus.

48. pass upon me, make sallies of wit at my expense; the metaphor is from fencing; see III. 4. 302.

49. ther'd expenses; giving him a present (drinking-money).
52. sick for one; alluding to her love of Orsino.
55. a pair of these. He looks at the coin which Viola has given him and hints that he would like another. Similarly he gets a double 'tip' out of Orsino (v. 1.).

57. put to use, put out to interest. Cf. Venus and Adonis, 768, "But gold that's put to use more gold begets."

58. Pandarus, Cressida's uncle, who enabled the lovers Troilus and Cressida to meet. Their story was so popular in the Middle Ages that they became proverbial characters, Cressida as the faithless woman, Troilus as the faithful lover. It forms the subject of one of Chaucer's poems and one of Shakespeare's plays.

- 61, 62. The matter...is not great; 'it is not much to beg for a Cressida, seeing that she herself was but a beggar.' It was a tradition, mentioned by Chaucer in his Troylus and Chryseyde, that Cressida became "a beggar."

63. construe, explain.

65. welkin, sky (see G.); element, though it here means 'sphere,' sometimes meant 'sky' (cf. I. i. 26): hence the Clown humorously treats element and welkin as the same in sense, and interchanges them.

Perhaps element = 'sphere,' as in Malvolio's "I am not of your element" (III. 4. 137), was a piece of Elizabethan slang. Certain words and phrases become fashionable for a time, and element may have been much in vogue just when Twelfth Night was written. In comedy there are these touches of contemporary allusion—references, which soon lose their point, to things of the passing hour.

67—74. These lines are a good summary of the duties and qualifications of the professional Fool or Clown.

69. their mood, the mood of those; see I. 5. 305, note. The Fool must suit his fooling to different people and occasions.

71, 72. Just as the untrained hawk ("haggard") flies after every bird that crosses its flight, so the Fool must seize on every chance incident and make it an occasion of fooling. His duty, in short, is (1) to let slip no incident, (2) to treat the incident when he has seized it in a way that suits the persons and the circumstances. Especially in this latter point does the really competent Fool show his discrimination.

Many editors print "Not, like the haggard," arguing that a trained Fool such as the passage describes would not be compared with an untrained hawk. But (1) the comparison is limited to one point, viz. that the clever Fool, like the "haggard," catches at everything which "comes before his eye": this is the sole resemblance between them suggested, and it furnishes a just point of comparison. (2) The change of text, not for and, is too great. haggard; see G. and cf. the Religio Medici, I. x.: "I teach my haggard and unreclaimed reason to stoop unto the lure of faith." checks; see II. 5. 124, note.

74, 75. It is quite proper ("fit") that a Fool should "play the fool"—(67) that is "wisely": but wise men must not.

75. The 1st Folio reads "But wisemens folly falne, quite taint their wit." The reading in our text is the nearest to the Folio and that generally adopted. I suppose that the s in "wise men-s" was due to "wise man's" in 73, the printer repeating s by a mere slip.

folly-fallen, fallen into folly, grown foolish. taint their wit, infect their whole intelligence with folly and so spoil it; cf. III. 4. 14

82, 83. encounter, go towards. trade, business. Shakespeare's satire of the affected diction of "courtiers" (97) is emphatic; cf. Osric in Hamlet, the "Gentlemen" in Winter's Tale, v. 2. To "parley Euphuism" was quite the correct thing at Elizabeth's court.

86. list, end, goal; lit. 'boundary'; cf. lists of a tournament.

87. taste, make trial of (cf. III. 4. 267); another affected word.

89. Cf. Two Gentlemen of Verona, II. 5. 28: "I understand thee not"... "My staff understands me." Milton borrows the joke, Paradise Lost, VI. 625—627.

93. gait; with a quibble, I suppose, on gate; cf. "entrance."

94. prevented, anticipated; see G.

100. pregnant, ready. vouchsafed, graciously attentive.

102. all ready, i.e. for the first opportunity of using them. The 1st Folio has already.

110. lowly feigning, feigned lowliness, pretended humility.

114. For him, as for, as regards, him.

115. blanks; cf. II. 4. 113.

117. by your leave, excuse me; an apology for interrupting.

119. i.e. make love to her on his own (Cesario's) behalf.

120. hear you to solicit; see I. 5. 315, 317, note.

121. An allusion to the doctrine of Pythagoras that the eight (in later times, the number was raised to nine) "spheres" containing the planets and stars produced by their revolutions a music which is inaudible to mortal ears. Each sphere was thought to produce "one note in one tone; and from all the eight notes there results a single harmony" (Plato's Republic, bk x. 617). The notion of this "sphere-music" became proverbial and is often referred to in poetry. The theory of the "spheres" belonged to the Ptolemaic astronomy, the system adopted in Paradise Lost; see Appendix thereon in the Pitt Press editions of Par. Lost.

122. beseech; Shakespeare often omits I with this word; see The Tempest, I. 2. 473. Cf. prithee short for "I pray thee."

123. i.e. "after the enchantment your presence worked in my affections" (Warburton). here; misspelt heare in the Folios.

124. abuse; probably = 'deceive'; see G.

126, 127. hard construction, unfavourable interpretation of my conduct; cf. II. 3. 190. to force, by forcing; cf. II. 5. 6.

128. none of yours; for none = 'nothing,' see I. 3. 113, note.

what might you think? what could you think? Cf. I. 1. 24.

130. The metaphor of tying an animal to a stake and then setting on dogs to bait or worry it; cf. II. 5. 9, Macbeth, V. 7. 2, 3.

131, 132. i.e. to one who is so quick of perception ("receiving") as you are I have said enough to reveal my secret.

132. cypress, a kerchief of crape; see G. bosom, the part of the body and dress concealing the heart=the actual "seat" of love. Olivia means that Cesario (Viola) can see right into her heart and perceive the love that it cherishes for Cesario.

133. The voice rests on hides, making it metrically = two syllables; the later Folios insert poor before heart. Some editors read hideth.

134. degree, a step; for this literal use cf. Julius Cæsar, II. I. 26, where Shakespeare speaks of the "degrees" of a ladder.

135. grize, a step; see G. a vulgar proof, a common experience.

144. proper, fine, handsome; cf. II. 2. 30, note.

146. Westward-ho! and Eastward-ho! were cries ("up" and "down") of the boatmen on the Thames, the great medium of transport. Each served as the title of a comedy of London life. Westward-ho! also became associated with the Spanish Main; cf. Kingsley's book.

151, 152. Apparently Viola means that Olivia forgets her position—"what she is"—in declaring her love for a page. Olivia replies that she does forget her position and Cesario's (Viola's) too.

160. would seem hid, wishes to remain hidden.

163. maugre, in spite of (F. malgré).

165, 166. Do not extort etc.; 'do not, from what I have just said ("this clause"), force reasons, on your part ("thy"), for thinking that because I woo you, you have no cause to woo (or "love") me.' The need of rhyme causes some ambiguity of expression, as often.

167. thus, with this thought, viz. that "Love sought" etc.

171. that, her love, which is implied by "heart, bosom, truth." nor never, emphatic negative; cf. II. I. I.

172. save I; see save in G.

Scene 2.

6. I saw your niece; he alludes to the meeting of Olivia and Cesario (Viola) in the last Scene; cf. his letter III. 4. 171.

8. orchard, garden, i.e. of Olivia's house; see G.

9. the while, in the meantime; while was originally a noun meaning 'time'—cf. V. 414.

12. argument, proof; so argue=to prove (Lat. argueret), cf. Paradise Lost, IV. 830, "Not to know me argues yourselves unknown."

22. liver; here regarded as the seat of courage; cf. 66.

23. accosted; cf. I. 3. 52, and see G.
fire-new from the mint, i.e. just coined.

26. looked for, expected of you. balked, neglected, omitted.

28. sailed into the north; you are regarded coldly by her.

29. like an icicle...This has been thought to allude to the discovery of Northern Nova Zembla in 1596 by Barents, a Dutchman. The ruins of the house he built there were discovered in 1871 (Shakespeare's England, I. 181).

34. had as lief, would as willingly; cf. Germ. lieber, rather, sooner.

The Brownists were a Puritan sect, so called from their leader Robert Browne, a noted Separatist or Independent in Elizabeth's reign. They seem to have been "the constant objects of popular satire" in Shakespeare's time (Steevens).

politician; in Shakespeare a depreciatory word = 'schemer, intriguer.'

35. Build me; me is the indirect object = 'for me.' This dative use of the pronoun is common in Shakespeare, and illustrates the inflected element in English (see p. 165). Cf. "challenge me" (36), "bear me" (43), "make me" (I. 5. 287), "hear me this" (v. 123).

38—41. assure thyself; 'be sure that nothing recommends a man more to a woman than a reputation for courage.' broker, agent.

46. curst, sharp in your language; see G. it is no matter how, you need not trouble to be witty.

48. if thou thou'st; to address anyone with whom you were not intimate as thou was a mark of great contempt; cf. tutoyer in French.

51. the bed of Ware; the famous oak bedstead, about 11 feet square and 7½ feet high, able to hold 12 persons, which was long at the "Saracen's Head" Inn at Ware, in Hertfordshire. It is still preserved.

52. gall, bitterness, rancour; also, ox-gall was then used in ink.

56. cubiculo, chamber; an Italian form from Lat. cubiculum.

57. a dear manakin to you; for the position of dear, on which to you depends, cf. Richard II., III. I. 9, "A happy gentleman in blood and lineaments," i.e. happy in blood, etc. Such transpositions are common in Shakespeare. (Abbott, pp. 308, 309).

58. dear to him; expensive (having borrowed so much money).

64. wainropes, cart-ropes. hale, drag.

65. if he were, and you find; in Shakespeare, as in ordinary spoken English, strict sequence of tenses is often neglected.

66. A "white," bloodless liver was thought a mark of cowardice.

67. anatomy, body (said with contempt); properly 'skeleton.'

68. opposite, opponent, adversary; cf. III. 4. 253, 293.

71, 72. "The wren generally lays nine or ten eggs at a time, and the last hatched of all birds are usually the smallest and weakest of the whole brood." Maria's smallness was alluded to in I. 5. 218.

nine; a correction of the reading mine of the Folios.

the spleen, 'a fit.'

74, 75. Probably an echo of the Prayer-Book (Athanasian Creed). renegado, apostate, i.e. no longer a Christian; see G.

77. impossible passages of grossness, incredible acts of stupidity; cf. Much Ado, v. I. 164. Some interpret 'gross impositions.'

80. pedant, schoolmaster, pedagogue; so always in Shakespeare.

81. The practice of holding school in a church, or in a room over the porch, was not uncommon. Shakespeare must have seen the boys going to school at St Olave's by the Bankside, near the Globe Theatre, or St Michael's, Cornhill. During his boyhood the grammar school at Stratford was held in the old Chapel of the Guild (Shakespeare's England, I. 227).

85. A time reference for the date of Twelfth Night. The "new map" was a map of the world published in 1600, which created a great stir because of its "lines," i.e. rhumb-lines = "a set of straight lines drawn through a point on a map or chart to indicate the course of a ship sailing continuously in any direction." It was our first scientific map, and was drawn by a Cambridge mathematician, Edward Wright, the pioneer of nautical science. It is reproduced in Shakespeare's England, I. 174, and the student who is able to consult that invaluable work will appreciate the point of Maria's simile. The treatment too of India and the East is fuller and more accurate than in any previous map: hence "augmentation." The fact that the great trading society, the East India Company, the foundation of our empire in India, received its charter from Queen Elizabeth in 1600 gives additional interest to references like this and the earlier one (II. 5. 17).

Scene 3.

That all the events of the play from this point to the end take place on the same day is proved by v. 96, 97.

2. i.e. since the trouble ("pains") of following me pleases you.

6. 'And it was not only love that did incite ("spur") me.'

8. jealousy, anxiety, fear.

9. Being skilless in, since you are a stranger in.

13. Scan "my kínd | Antón|io," slurring the last two letters of the name into one extra syllable. Long proper names at the end of a line often bear only one accent and get slurred (i.e. shortened) thus.

15, 16. ‘And often the obligation of kindnesses is got rid of with such valueless pay.’ shuffled off; the metaphor of getting free from a fetter or chain; cf. Hamlet, III. i. 67, “When we have shuffled off this mortal coil.”

17. my worth, what I am worth, i.e. my wealth.

19. reliques, monuments, i.e. old buildings, etc.

26. in a sea-fight; see v. 54—66. the count his; see his in G. S. rightly limits the galley, a long oared vessel, to the Mediterranean; it was obviously unsuitable for rough northern waters.

29. Belike, I suppose, probably; =by likelihood.

32. bloody argument, cause of bloodshed.

34. for traffic's sake, on account of our trade.

36. lapsed, caught, found. The word properly means ‘fallen’; here the context implies ‘fallen into a trap,’ i.e. caught.

39. In the south suburbs; he chooses an inn away from the busy part of the town as being safer for him. “Elephant” is not an uncommon name for an inn; cf. the well-known “Elephant and Castle.” Shakespeare refers here to a London tavern close to the Globe Theatre on the Bank-side (which was outside the bounds of the “City”—hence “suburbs”—on the south bank of the Thames). A merchant of Ragusa, whose letters from London (1590—1591) to a friend in Florence have been discovered recently, mentions that an Italian acquaintance was lodging at “the Elephant.” In The Taming of the Shrew, IV. 4. 4, 5, S. transfers to Genoa a London tavern, the Pegasus in Cheapside, mentioned in other Elizabethan plays. (The Times Literary Supplement, July 10, August 21, 1919; Shakespeare's England, II. 174, 175.)

44. toy, trifle; see G.

45, 46. store, possessions. not for, not suitable for, i.e. you have no money to waste. idle markets, unnecessary purchases.

Scene 4.

As regards the time of action, this Scene follows immediately on the last. Thus between Antonio’s giving his purse to Sebastian and asking for it back (see lines 368—386 of this Scene) “not half an hour” elapsed (v. 95).

The Scene is laid in the garden so that Sir Toby and the others may look on without being seen. Maria had promised them a good view.

him, Cesario (Viola). he says, suppose that he says.

2. bestow of, i.e. on. Elizabethan writers often use of=on and on=of; cf. Merry Wives of Windsor, I. 4. 80, "he came of an errand."

5. sad, sober, grave; see G. civil, well-mannered.

9. possessed, i.e. with an evil spirit, so 'mad.'

12. you were best; see I. 5. 34.

14. tainted; cf. III. I. 75, note.

20. upon a sad occasion, on a serious matter; Malvolio takes saa in its common sense 'sorrowful.'

25. "Please one and please all." A ballad with this title, thought to have been written by Richard Tarleton, Queen Elizabeth's jester, is extant. For sonnet='poem,' see G.

30, 31. Roman hand. An allusion to the elegant "Italian" style of handwriting which came into fashion in England in the Elizabethan age. See Shakespeare's England, I. 201.

38. daws (jackdaws), so called from the noise they make.

41. this boldness. Maria artfully uses a word which makes him quote the advice in the letter, "be not afraid."

52—61. Of course, Olivia, not knowing that Malvolio quotes the words of the letter in which thy...thee referred to him, thinks that by thy and thee Malvolio means her. Cf. her exclamation "Am I made?"

53. Thy yellow stockings! In her amazement she repeats his words; but she means my.

59. Am I made? are my fortunes made? A ridiculous thing for a servant to tell his high-born, wealthy mistress.

61. midsummer madness; a proverbial phrase. It was supposed that at Midsummer, "the brain, being heated by the intensity of the sun's rays, was more susceptible of those flights of imagination which border on insanity, than at any other period of the year" (Drake). By using such a strong phrase Olivia perhaps means that Malvolio is in a worse state than Maria led her to anticipate (8—14).

67—70. Let this fellow...my dowry. Important as showing the high esteem in which Olivia holds Malvolio, and which we must not ignore. The difficulty of acting the part of Malvolio is to preserve respect for his merits, yet bring out the ludicrousness of the mistake, and of the situations, into which his great failing (vanity) betrays him. Some editors think that Olivia refers here to Cesario. miscarry, come to harm.

80, 81. sad; cf. 5. in the habit, with the bearing of a great man.

82. limed her, caught her, as a bird with birdlime.

81, 83. Jove's...Jove. Some believe that Shakespeare wrote God's

...God (which Halliwell even prints), and that the editors of the 1st Folio made the change because of the statute of James I. forbidding profanity on the stage. There are cases where this happened; but surely the reading here ought to correspond with II. 5. 107 ("Jove knows I love") and 184 ("Jove and my stars"), and, considering the ludicrous character of all three passages, I doubt very much whether Shakespeare would have introduced the name God into them.

84. Fellow; he thinks that Olivia (67) used fellow = 'companion' or 'equal'; whereas she meant 'this man' (said with some contempt).

85. after my degree, i.e. according to (Lat. secundum) my rank.

86, 87. A quibble on scruple = (1) 'a doubt,' (2) 'the third part of a dram,' i.e. a very small amount.

88. incredulous, incredible.

95. drawn in little, compressed into a small space.

Legion; "Treated as a noun proper, to denote a compound of all the devils of hell" (Schmidt). See Mark v. 9, Luke viii. 30.

98. man; a familiar form of address, which, coming from the servant Fabian, vexes Malvolio (as it was meant to).

99. Go off. Note how Malvolio now puts into practice the advice of the letter—"be opposite...surly" etc.

100. private, privacy; cf. "in private."

108. he's an enemy; see II. 2. 29, note.

121. move him, make him angry.

125. my bawcock, my fine fellow; see G.

128. Biddy; a kind of nonsense word used by children in calling chickens (cf. "chuck") to feed. Perhaps this is from some ballad.

129. cherry-pit; a childish game of pitching cherry-stones into a little hole.

130. Collier; then a term of abuse. "The devil is called a Collier for his blackness," says Johnson; he quotes the proverb, "'Like will to like,' quoth the Devil to the Collier." Scott gives another version: "Match for match, quoth the devil to the collier" (Kenilworth, xiv.).

142. genius, spirit = Lat. genius (Gk. $\delta\alpha\mu\omega\nu$), 'a guardian, spirit.'

145. taint; just as something exposed to the air goes bad.

148. Shakespeare alludes several times to the practice of confining madmen in a dark house or room—a supposed cure for lunacy—and fettering them. Cf. Comedy of Errors, IV. 4. 95, 97:

"Mistress, both man and master is possess'd;

They must be bound and laid in some dark room."

150. carry it, manage it, i.e. their plan.

154. finder, discoverer ; but there is an allusion (cf. "bar") to the legal phrase 'to find,' as in 'find guilty' = 'bring in a verdict of guilty.'

156. May morning ; an allusion to the festivities formerly held on May 1st, such as 'going a-Maying,' i.e. to gather hawthorn, crowning the May-Queen, setting up the May-pole, singing May-carols, etc.

165. admire, be surprised ; see G.

168. note, remark.

171. in my sight ; see III. 2. 8, note.

174. sense-less ; Sir Andrew is not to hear the last syllable.

181. Cf. Much Ado About Nothing, II. 1. 327, "it keeps on the windy side of care," i.e. the safe side. A metaphor taken from seaman-ship : when two sailing-boats race, that which is to windward has an advantage over the other. The reference cannot well be to sport : if you approach game "on the windy side" = the side from which the wind blows (the natural meaning), the scent is carried by the wind and the game startled ; i.e. "the windy side" is the wrong one to choose.

184. upon one of our souls, i.e. the soul of the man killed in the duel ; Sir Andrew hopes that it may not be his soul.

191. commerce, intercourse.

193. scout me, keep watch for me ; cf. "build me," III. 2. 35, note.

194. bum-baily, a subordinate officer of the law, employed to execute sheriff's writs and (in former days) to arrest debtors. The word is exactly similar in sense and formation to F. pousse-cul.

195. draw, i.e. thy sword.

198. gives manhood more approbation, gains a man more credit for courage than an actual test of it would.

203. gives him out to be, shows him to be.

208. clodpole, blockhead.

216. cockatrice; a fabulous serpent, also called basilisk ; the glance of its eyes was supposed to be deadly. Cf. Romeo, III. 2. 47, "death-darting eye of cockatrice."

217. presently, immediately, i.e. directly after Cesario leaves.

222. laid...on't. Probably = 'staked upon it,' from the metaphor of 'laying a wager,' i.e. betting. Cf. 433 and Hamlet, V. 2. 174, "he hath laid on twelve for nine" (= 'twelve to nine'). The it ('t) refers to the whole idea in "I have said too much." For on't many would substitute out, taking laid out = 'exposed to reproach.' unchary, heedlessly.

228. jewel, trinket; probably a 'miniature' portrait set in gold and gems, which might well be called a 'jewel'; a favourite sort of gift. Miniature-painting reached a high pitch under the Tudors.

232. i.e. that may be given to you without loss of honour.

234. with mine honour; if she gives to Orsino the love which she has already given to Cesario (Viola), then her honour will not be "saved" (232)—she will have lost it.

238. God save thee; we had the French phrase, III. I. 78. Note that Sir Toby, wishing to be familiar, says thee, and that Viola replies by the more formal you. 243. attends, awaits.

244. dismount thy tuck, draw thy sword; another of Sir Toby's affected phrases (used ironically to the "courtier"); like the affected Osric's use of "carriages" for the straps or "hangers" of a sword-belt (Hamlet, v. 2. 156—160). The Italian was the great school of fencing in Shakespeare's time. Italian masters taught fencing in London. Hence many fencing-terms, like tuck (see G.), were of Italian origin. yare, ready, quick; see G.

257, 258. Sir Toby wishes Cesario (Viola) to believe that Sir Andrew, though not a warrior with great military distinctions, is none the less a terrible fellow to deal with in private affairs of honour.

dubbed, knighted. unhatched, not hacked with blows; see G.

on carpet consideration, i.e. as a "carpet-knight." "Carpet-knights" were those who received knighthood in consideration of civil (not military) services to the state, or merely through the personal favour of the monarch. As they knelt to receive their honour, not on the field of battle but on the carpeted floor of some court-chamber, they were termed "carpet-knights." The distinction was thought little of compared with that of the knight who won his knighthood in time of war for brave exploits, and gradually "carpet-knight" came to be a contemptuous term for an effeminate, unwarlike man. So in Much Ado About Nothing, v. 2. 32, carpet-monger signifies one who is more at home on the carpets of ladies' bowers than on battle-fields.

260. divorced, separated (i.e. he has killed three men in duels).

261. satisfaction can be none; i.e. there can be; the omission of there is common.

The position of none=‘not at all’ expresses emphasis. Cf. Paradise Lost, XI. 612, “but they his gifts acknowledged none.”

262. hob, nob, hit or miss; come what may; see G.

265. conduct, escort; cf. the phrase ‘safe conduct.’

266. put quarrels on, pick quarrels with.

267. taste, try, put to the proof; cf. III. I. 87.

268. quirk, humour; see G.

269, 270. derives itself, springs from. competent, sufficient.

275. meddle you must, you cannot get out of the difficulty, you must do something (i.e. fight).

278. know of, ask; cf. Othello, v. 1. 117, "Go know of Cassio where he supp'd tonight."

280. nothing of my purpose, no intentional injury or insult.

286. arbitrement, decision; Fabian means 'a duel to the death.'

290. Nothing of that..., 'Judging by his outward appearance you would never suppose him to be the terrible fellow that in actual combat you will find him.'

298. sir priest; cf. "Sir Topas the curate" in iv. 1, and "Sir Hugh Evans, a Welsh parson" in The Merry Wives of Windsor. The title Sir was formerly applied to clergymen because "dominus, the academical title of a Bachelor of Arts, was usually rendered by Sir in English at the Universities....Therefore, as most clerical persons had taken that first degree [namely, B.A.], it became usual to style them Sir."—Nares. The title dominus is still retained at Cambridge, being abbreviated in the official class-lists to Ds.

301. Re-enter Sir Toby. Dyce begins a new Scene here, and when Twelfth Night is acted there is commonly a slight change of scenery to shew that the rest of the Act takes place at "the orchard-end" (244), where Sir Andrew is waiting. The change is indicated (1) by Sir Toby's words (282) "till my return"; (2) by v. 67, where Antonio is described as having been arrested "in the streets." No doubt, the street or road running by the boundary of the "orchard," i.e. garden, is meant: Antonio coming along this street sees the confusion by the garden, takes part in it, and is arrested there. Neither he nor the Officers would be likely to have intruded into Olivia's private grounds. The change is not marked in the Folios, perhaps because it is not to an entirely different locality but only just to the end of the same garden in which the other events have taken place. It is convenient for references to retain the old arrangement.

302. firago, i.e. virago; properly applied to a shrewish woman. Cf. Sir Andrew's use of Jezebel (II. 5. 46) as a reproach for a man.

a pass, a bout; as we say, 'a turn with' the rapier. In fencing pass generally means 'thrust'; cf. III. 1. 48.

303. the stuck, the thrust; see G. Shakespeare is fond of fencing terms; cf. "answer," "bout," "motion" (the attack in fencing).

305. answer, the return thrust after parrying or receiving a hit.

307. the Sophy; cf. II. 5. 198 and see G.

316. I'll make the motion, I will propose it to him.

319. ride you; a slang phrase = 'make a fool of you.' He means to get Sir Andrew's horse for himself.

320. to take up, to make up, settle.

322. as horribly conceited, has an equally fearful opinion of him.

337. by the duello, according to the laws of duelling; see G.

343. this young gentleman; of course, Antonio mistakes Cesario (Viola) for Sebastian from whom he parted so recently (III. 3).

344. Have done; the subjunctive have puts the matter doubtfully—'if it really is the case that.' Antonio does not think it likely that Sebastian has done wrong.

349. undertaker, meddler, one who undertakes another's business.

359. This is the man. Apparently the Officers have heard of Antonio's being in the town and have come in pursuit of him.

363. favour, face; cf. II. 4. 24.

366. with seeking, i.e. from; with often denotes a cause; cf. phrases like "pale with fear," "die with terror," Lucrece, 183, 231.

379. having, property, possessions. Cf. Merry Wives of Windsor, III. 2. 73, "the gentleman is of no having."

380. my present, the money which I have with me.

381. now, at such a time as this; said with emphasis.

382. my deserts to, my deserving acts towards, i.e. kindnesses.

383. lack persuasion, fail to move you.

384. upbraid, reproach—'cast in your teeth' (Lat. objicere).

397. venerable, worthy of respect. did, paid.

400—404. Antonio expresses to Viola the very sentiment that she expressed to the Captain (I. 2. 48—51): a fine touch of humour.

400. feature, general appearance, exterior; not a particular feature of the face (its modern use). Cf. complexion II. 4. 27; both words have narrowed in sense.

Of course, Antonio thinks that Cesario (Viola), whom he mistakes for Sebastian, disowns him because he is in trouble; cf. v. 90.

403. the beauteous-evil, those who are beautiful but bad; cf. "proper-false," II. 2. 30. "Whited sepulchres," as Scripture says.

404. trunks o'erflourished, chests carved with elaborate designs. In old country-houses one often sees such pieces of furniture. Cotgrave (1611) has "Fringoteries: Frets, wriggled flourishings in carving." Anyone who has ever done wood-carving will know exactly what Shakespeare seems to have meant by "o'erflourished." Some, however, think that the metaphor is from tree-trunks, decayed and hollow within but covered with verdure (moss, fungi etc.) outside.

407, 408. ‘His words seem to spring from such genuine feeling that he cannot be pretending.’

412, 413. a couplet, i.e. a couple. saws, maxims; see G.

415. living in my glass. She is so like Sebastian that when she looks in her mirror she, as it were, sees him. living, to be living.

417, 418. We have not been told previously that she was dressed like her brother—only that she had donned a page’s dress. The similarity of dress had helped to mislead Antonio.

418. if it prove, if it turn out to be so, viz. that she has been mistaken for her brother (410).

419. fresh in love, full of love (kindness). In fresh applied to “salt waves” there is a quibble; cf. ‘fresh (i.e. not salt) water.’

427. ’Slid; short for the oath God’s lid; see II. 5. 38, note.

431. event, issue, result; then a common meaning; cf. Lat. eventus.

432. yet, after all.

ACT IV.

Scene 1.

2. sent for you, i.e. by Olivia. The Clown supposes that he is speaking to Cesario (Viola), as in III. 1 (beginning of the Scene).

5. well held out, you are keeping up the pretence well (i.e. of not knowing the Clown).

6. nor...not; a good illustration of the double negative.

10. vent, ‘utter.’ In As You Like It, II. 7. 41, Jaques speaks of the Fool “venting” his nonsense. There may have been some contemporary joke about the word.

14, 15. I am afraid...a cockney. A common meaning of cockney (see G.) in Shakespeare’s time was ‘an effeminate, affected person.’ That is the meaning here. The Clown thinks that Sebastian, for a man, talks in an effeminate, affected style; and he indicates his opinion by saying, ‘I suppose affectation will soon be universal: that clumsy monster the world will be taking to an affected, mincing style of language and manner.’ Viola had ridiculed the Clown himself somewhat for “dallying nicely with words” (III. 1. 17): perhaps the Clown, mistaking Sebastian for Viola, intends his present remark as a retort.

16. ungird, relax. strangeness, reserved manner; cf. II. 5. 184.

19. Greek; then a colloquial term for a jovial, merry person. Cf.

Minsheu (Dictionary, 1617), "a merie Greeke... a jester." The use arose from the Roman view of the Greeks as a genial, pleasure-loving people; cf. Lat. gracari, 'to live in the Greek (i.e. easy) manner.' So in "as merry as a grig," i.e. a Greek.

22. open, liberal; cf. 'open-handed' = generous. The Clown, of course, thinks that this is the second time that Cesario (Viola) has given him a present, the first time being in III. 1. 49—60.

24. after fourteen years' purchase; a legal phrase connected with the buying of land. The ordinary price of land in Shakespeare's time was 12 years' purchase: hence by 14 years the Clown implies "a very extravagant price."

25. met you again; Sir Andrew had pursued Viola (III. 4. 427).

32. tell my lady. It seems rather mean in the Clown to tell tales of his friends, but the play requires that he should let Olivia know, so that she may be brought upon the scene and thus meet Sebastian.

I would not be. He knows how angry Olivia will be with Sir Toby and Sir Andrew for assaulting Sebastian, whom he mistakes (as Olivia does afterwards) for Cesario (Viola).

36. action, law-suit; cf. v. 282. battery, unlawful assailing and striking; a legal phrase, more fully 'assault and battery.' Shakespeare uses legal terms frequently and with accuracy; and this has been considered by some to confirm the vague tradition that as a youth he was for a time in an attorney's office. Cf. 24, above, and 57 ("extent"): see also 1. 3. 7; 1. 5. 142, 143 (note), 263; III. 4. 154.

43. well fleshed; like a hawk or hound that has tasted the blood of its quarry (game), and been made fiercer thereby. Sebastian, to whom the words are addressed, has been "fleshed" upon Sir Andrew.

47. malapert, saucy. Sir Toby, unlike his friend, is brave.

52. In Cymbeline, IV. 2. 100, 120 mountaineer implies 'savage, barbarous'; so in Milton's Comus, 426, "No savage fierce...or mountaineer."

55. Rudesby, rough fellow; cf. Taming of the Shrew, III. 2. 10. "a mad-brain rudesby." Olivia addresses Sir Toby.

56. sway, rule.

57. extent, violent attack; a legal term; see G.

59. fruitless, idle, pointless.

60. botch'd up, made up, brought about; cf. 1. 5. 51.

61. thou shalt not choose but, you must. Perhaps the full form of the expression would be 'thou shalt not choose anything but (i.e. except) to go.' Olivia must be pleased and surprised at "Cesario's" sudden complacency.

62. Beshrew, woe to ! a plague upon ! See G.

63. Start; a technical word for rousing game; cf. I Henry IV., I. 3. 198, "to start a hare." So there is probably a pun on heart and hart (stag), as in I. 1. 17, 18.

Scene 2.

2. Sir Topas. The name is from Chaucer, Sir Thopas being the title of one of the Canterbury Tales. On Sir see III. 4. 298.

7. not tall enough; he has not an imposing presence such as would show off his clerical robes to the best effect.

10. housekeeper, host; cf. housekeeping=hospitality, or hospitable ways, 2 Henry VI. I. 1. 191. goes as fairly; 'it is just as honourable to be called ("said") an honest man as to be called a scholar.'

11. careful; full of the poor scholar's cares and wants.

12. competitors, confederates, partners; see G.

14. Bonos dies. The Clown attempts to talk Latin in his character as clergyman.

15. the old hermit; I imagine that this is one of the Clown's imaginary characters; see I. 5. 39, note.

16. King Gorboduc; an ancient British King. The name would be familiar to an Elizabethan audience since there was a well-known play, the earliest blank-verse tragedy in English, called Gorboduc (or Ferrex and Porrex), 1561.

21. Peace! the salutation of a clergyman on entering a house. Cf. the Prayer-Book ('Visitation of the Sick'), "Peace be to this house, and to all that dwell in it."

23. Malvolio [Within]. Note that throughout this scene Malvolio speaks from an inner chamber (the "dark room," III. 4. 148).

36. modest, moderate; he might have said something much more offensive than "dishonest Satan."

40, 41. bay-windows=bow-windows, which form a bay or bow, i.e. recess, in a room. Of course, there are no windows. barricadoes; see G.

clear-stories. The 1st Folio has cleere stores, commonly taken as a reference to the clear (or clere-) story of Gothic architecture. See G., and cf. an extract in the New English Dictionary from an architectural work of the 17th century which speaks of "Clear story, Bay windows... and sundry other things in architecture" (T. Willsford's Architectonice, 1659). The other Folios have cleare (i.e. transparent) stones: if that is the right reading, then it is intentional nonsense like the notion of "transparent" barricadoes or a "south-north" aspect.

43. obstruction, i.e. to the view.

48. the Egyptians. Exodus x. 21—23.

51—53. abused, ill-treated, used badly. question; perhaps ‘discussion.’ constant, consistent, logical.

54. Pythagoras, the Greek philosopher supposed to have first taught the doctrine of the transmigration of souls, e.g. that the souls of some human beings pass after their death into the forms of animals. The Clown asks the question because he knows that Malvolio, as a Puritan, will consider such a pagan idea very offensive.

63, 64. allow of, admit. “The Clown mentions a woodcock particularly, because that bird was supposed to have very little brains, and therefore was a proper ancestor for a man out of his wits”—Malone.

68. for all waters, ready for anything. Sir Toby has complimented him on the skill with which he has played his part; he replies, “O, I can assume any character—clergyman or clown: I can turn my hand to anything.” The metaphor is probably that of a fish “which can swim equally well in all waters”—Malone. Some think that the phrase refers to an Italian proverb, meaning ‘thou hast a cloak for all waters’; others, that waters has a colloquial Elizabethan sense ‘potations.’

75. so far in offence; through his encounter with Sebastian (iv. 1).

Exeunt. Maria does not appear again. It was apparently after leaving the stage here with Sir Toby that she got married (v. 372).

78. Hey Robin. This song, found in a MS. volume dating from the reign of Henry VIII., is printed in Percy’s Reliques of Ancient English Poetry. It is a dialogue between two lovers, Robin and his friend, who discuss their love-affairs in question and answer.

80. Fool. Malvolio first addresses the Clown in his usual contemptuous way, but soon becomes more courteous (“Good fool”). Contrast his tone towards the Clown in this Scene with that in i. 5.

81. perdy; French pardieu, a common oath, corrupted.

87. help me; understand so, corresponding to ‘as ever thou wilt’ = ‘in proportion as.’

89. I will live to be thankful; the emphasis is on thankful, not live.

92. how fell you besides? how did you lose?

93. five wits; then a proverbial term by which “common wit, imagination, fantasy, estimation, memory” were indicated. The “five wits” corresponded to (sometimes were identified with) the “five senses.”

94. notoriously; as we say ‘scandalously’ i.e. shamefully.

96. But as well? only as well? The emphasis is on but.

99. propertied me, treated me as though I were a mere tool or implement, not as a man with a will of my own. Cf. King John, v. 2. 79, "I am too high-born to be propertied," and Julius Caesar, iv. 1. 36, 40, "A barren-spirited fellow...a property," i.e. one with whom you can do what you please. Property keeps the idea 'implement' in "stage-properties," i.e. stage-requisites, actors' equipments etc.

102. advise you, be careful; see G.

103. Malvolio, Malvolio; supposed to be said by Sir Topas.

104. endeavour thyself, strive. The reflexive use of verbs which are now intransitive is a feature of Shakespearian English; cf. v. 286.

105. babble-babble, foolish talking; see G.

107. Maintain no words. A dialogue in two voices is supposed to go on between Sir Topas and the Clown (whose part here needs very clever acting). Sir Topas tells him not to talk to Malvolio, and then departs, his last word spoken aloud being amen.

109. I will, Sir, I will; "spoken (says Johnson) after a pause as if, in the mean-time, Sir Topas had whispered" to the Clown.

112. shent, reproved, i.e. by Sir Topas; see G.

131. A snatch from some old ballad; in singing it the Clown would use his tabor (III. 1. 2). "Anon, anon, sir," was the regular phrase of innkeepers and tapsters; like our waiters' "Coming, sir."

134—141. The Vice, a personification of wickedness, and the Devil were traditional characters of the old 'Morality' plays, in which they represented the popular comic element. Each was marked by a traditional equipment. The Vice, in a long coat, a vizor and a cap with ass's ears, bore a dagger of lath (i.e. soft wood); the Devil, often dressed as a bear, had long talons and carried a club. The chief fun of the scenes in which they appeared was that the Vice belaboured the Devil with the dagger of lath and tried to cut his talons, i.e. pare his nails. Cf. Henry V., iv. 4. 75—77, "this roaring devil i' the old play...every-one may pare his nails with a wooden dagger." In the end the Devil descended to the infernal regions with the Vice on his back. From the character of the Vice was developed the Fool or Clown of Shakespeare's plays. Stage-weapons are "dummies," to avoid wounds.

138. ah, ha!; the usual address of the Vice to the Devil in the Morality plays. These lines (138—141) represent what the Vice says to the Devil in the plays—not what the Clown says in his own character to Malvolio.

141. In Greene's Friar Bacon (1594), Scene xv., the Devil appears and is addressed by a character as "goodman friend." Possibly good man (see G.) was a traditional title for him.

The repetition of devil (cf. 138) does not seem to me awkward, the two stanzas being a piece of some doggerel ballad. But the "Globe" edition marks the line corrupt, and some editors change to drivel.

Scene 3.

2. this pearl; referring, no doubt, to an engagement ring.
6. there he was, i.e. he had been there, to bespeak entertainment (III. 3. 40); then he had gone about the town to look for Sebastian and been arrested, as we saw (III. 4. 360).

credit, report; literally 'a thing believed' (Lat. creditum).

12. instance, precedent, example. discourse, reason; see G.

15. trust, conviction.

18. Note that take (= 'undertake') applies to affairs, and give back (= 'settle') to dispatch.

21. deceivable, deceptive. In Elizabethan E. the termination -able, now commonly passive, was often active = ful. We still have "changeable," = 'full of change,' "peaceable," and others.

24. chantry, the small private chapel belonging to Olivia's house. In Italy, more than in England, large houses usually have a chapel.

26. In the light of v. 159 ("a contract") and 146—148 ("husband") this passage is now interpreted as a reference to, not the mere "betrothal" or "troth-plight" of an engaged couple, but an Elizabethan form of civil marriage, called the "contract of espousals." This "contract" was made before witnesses (cf. line 24), ratified with the gift of a ring, and "constituted a perfectly legal and valid marriage, though it required the religious solemnity ('celebration,' 30) to give the parties their legal status as regards property." It is believed that Shakespeare himself went through this form of "contract" with Anne Hathaway (afterwards through the religious rite), and that in this play and in Measure for Measure, IV. 1. 72, he is alluding to his own case.

29. Whiles, until; cf. "while then" = 'till then,' Macbeth, III. 1. 44.

30. What time, at which time, when.

34. father; the ordinary title of a priest; cf. v. 153.

35. fairly note, look favourably upon.

ACT V.

Scene 1.

The lapse of time is shown by line 166.

1. his letter, i.e. Malvolio's letter to Olivia.

7, 8. Perhaps Shakespeare alludes to a contemporary anecdote.

Manningham (see Introduction, p.viii.) relates in his Diary how "one Dr Bullein, the Queenes [i.e. Elizabeth's] kinsman, had a dog which he doted on soe much that the Queene understanding of it requested he would graunt her one desyre, and he should have what soever he would aske. Shee demaunded his dogge; he gave it. 'Nowe, Madame,' quoth he, 'you promised to give me my desyre.' 'I will,' quothe she. 'Then I pray you give me my dog againe.'"—Notes and Queries, 7. iv. 185. For another anecdote connected with Queen Elizabeth cf. Richard II., v. 5. 68.

10. trappings, belongings.

11. I know thee; the Clown had sung to Orsino (II. 4).

22. abused, deceived; cf. F. abuser.

23. conclusions, inferences: 'as it takes 2 negatives to make 1 affirmative, so it takes 2 people to make 1 kiss.' Throughout the play the Clown indulges in these sententious sayings, the point of which generally lies in the fact that they sound very wise or recondite, but in reality are very foolish or simple.

Some editors give another explanation suggested by the following passage in the play Lust's Dominion (earlier than Twelfth Night):

"Queen. Come, lets kiss.

Moor. Away, Away!

Queen. 'No, no,' says 'aye'; and twice 'away' says 'stay.'"

"No, no" makes 1 affirmative which ends in 1 kiss, and a second "no, no" makes 1 more affirmative which ends in 1 more kiss: hence the 4 negatives result in 2 kisses.

your four negatives. Shakespeare often uses your colloquially (cf. Latin iste), to indicate some person or thing known to everyone; e.g. in Hamlet, III. 2. 3, "you mouth it, as many of your players do," i.e. the players whom you and everybody know.

We have seen how Shakespeare himself ignores the fact that 4 negatives = 2 affirmatives by using 2 negatives = 1 strong affirmative.

32. double-dealing, duplicity; used, like double-dealer in 38, with a quibble. The Clown got a double present from Viola (III. 1).

35. grace, virtue. He quibbles on the sense, (1) 'pocket your virtue' (as we say), i.e. do not be too scrupulous, (2) 'put your gracious hand into your pocket,' i.e. take out your purse.

36. obey it; referring to either grace or counsel in 34.

37. so much...to be; understand as; cf. II. 4. 99.

39. Primo, secundo, tertio; probably a phrase used in some well-known game with dice; cf. "at this throw" = 'cast, venture,' 45.

41. triplex, triple time in music.

42. Bennet; short for Benedick. There was a well-known church of St Bennet, Paul's Wharf, destroyed in the Fire of London, 1666.

48. lullaby to, let it go to sleep—the metaphor suggested by “awake” in Orsino's speech.

57—60. bawbling, insignificant, trifling; see G. For...draught, in respect of its depth in the water. unprizable, valueless. scathful, harmful—‘full of scathe’ (= damage). bottom, ship.

61. envy...loss; those who were mortified at sight of his bravery and suffered loss through it. Abstract for concrete; see I. 5. 307, note.

64—67. “Topical” allusions. A great English society, the Levant Company (like the old East India Company) traded with the Levant, i.e. Greece and the Greek islands, e.g. “Candy”=Candia (Crete), and Asia Minor. Its headquarters in the East was Aleppo, and the “Phoenix” and the “Tiger” were famous London ships engaged in its trade. No doubt S. (and his audience) had them in mind. Cf. too Macbeth, I. 3. 7, where the witch says that “the master [captain] o' the Tiger” is gone “to Aleppo” (i.e. to Tripoli in Syria, the port of Aleppo, an inland city). In Antonio's exploits we get a glance at the pirates with whom the Mediterranean was infested—the “water-thieves” of The Merchant of Venice, I. 3. 22—25.

68. brabble, noisy brawl, quarrel.

69. drew, i.e. his sword. It is a pleasant touch that Viola at once stands up for Antonio, using her influence on his behalf.

70. put strange speech upon me, talked to me in an odd manner.

71. distraction, madness; scan as four syllables; see I. 1. 39, note.

73. their mercies, the mercies of those who; cf. III. 1. 69.

74. so dear, costing them so dear.

78. on base and ground, with good cause and reason.

82. wreck; see G.

85. all his in dedication, entirely devoted to his service.

86. pure, purely, entirely.

87. into, unto; a common use in Shakespeare.

89. being apprehended; understand I.

91. face me out of his acquaintance, pretend not to know me.

92. twenty-years-removed; such compound phrases are not uncommon in Shakespeare; cf. Richard II., I. 1. 180, “A jewel in a ten-times-barr'd-up chest.”

93. While one, in the time that it would take one to wink.

104. but that, save that which.

106. promise. Sebastian had promised to visit her and been delayed —we see later the reason why.

109. A point which may be made amusing in actual representation of the play is Olivia's distraction between Orsino and Cesario (Viola). She is longing to know why Cesario has not "kept promise": yet courtesy requires that she should pay some attention to the duke.

112. fat, distasteful; much the same as "fulsome."

121, 122. Shakespeare alludes to an episode in a very popular Greek romance or novel, the Aethiopica of Heliodorus, a writer of the second half of the fourth century A.D. The Aethiopica, so called because the scene is laid partly in Aethiopia, was translated into many languages. There was an English version, published about 1568 and again in 1587, through which, doubtless, the romance was known to Shakespeare and to many of his hearers, so that they would understand the allusion. (See II. 5. 45, note.)

The "Egyptian thief" was Thyamis, a native of Memphis in Egypt, captain of a band of robbers. He captured Chariclea (the heroine) and her lover Theagenes, desired to marry her, and for safety shut her up in a cave. Attacked by other robbers and finding himself doomed to perish ("at point of death"), Thyamis rushed to the cave to kill Chariclea, so that she might not fall into the hands of his enemies; for "it was customary with those barbarians, when they despaired of their own safety, first to make away with those whom they held dear, and desired for companions in the next life." In the darkness of the cave Thyamis slew another woman, and Chariclea was saved.

123. savours nobly, has in it a relish of nobility; cf. 322.

125. And that, and because; that, a conjunction = 'for that.'

126. screws, wrenches, forces.

128. minion, darling; see G.

129. tender; 'to treat kindly,' hence 'to hold dear' (as here).

131. in his master's spite, to the vexation of his master.

134. raven...dove; a proverbial contrast; cf. Midsummer-Night's Dream, II. 2. 114, "Who will not change a raven for a dove?"

136. To do you rest, to bring you peace of mind.

146—148. husband; note how emphasised; cf. Measure for Measure, IV. 1. 72, "He is your husband on a pre-contract." See IV. 3. 26, note.

149. fear, i.e. lest he (Cesario) should displease Orsino.

150. strangle thy propriety, disown what you really are, disavow yourself. Propriety here means individuality—that which is essentially a man's very own (Lat. proprius).

153. fear'st, i.e. to be.

156. occasion, necessity.

159. A contract, i.e. the "pre-contract" (as it is called in Measure for Measure, IV. 1. 72) of marriage; see IV. 3. 26, note.

162. interchangement. It is still customary for an engaged couple to give each other engagement rings.

168. sow'd, scattered, sprinkled. grizzle, a tinge of grey; cf. Hamlet, I. 2. 240, "His beard was grizzled." Cf. F. gris, 'grey.'

case, skin; so called because it 'encases' the body. "Every man's skinne is the case of a sinner," said an Elizabethan divine, Andrew Kingsmill (died 1569). In All's Well That Ends Well, III. 6. 111, to 'case the fox' means to strip off his skin.

169, 170. i.e. his own cunning will trip him up and ruin him.

174. Hold little faith, at least keep faith a little, i.e. do not perjure yourself by swearing falsely.

176. presently, immediately; see III. 4. 217.

179. cokcomb, head; see G.

181. forty pound; see II. 3. 20, note.

185. incardinate; Sir Andrew means incarnate. There is a similar mistake in Henry V., II. 3. 35, where the hostess confuses incarnate with carnation (the colour red).

187. Od's, a corruption of God's; we find it combined with other diminutives similar to lifelings ('a little life'). Cf. "od's heartlings," Merry Wives, III. 4. 59, "od's pittikins," Cymbeline, IV. 2. 293.

190—192. Viola refers to what took place in Act III., Scene 4; but since then Sir Andrew and Sir Toby have come across Sebastian—to their cost. bespeak you fair, spoke courteously to you.

194. set nothing by, think nothing of.

198. othergates, in another manner; see G.

205. Cf. The Tempest, III. 2. 9, 10, "Drink, servant-monster: thy eyes are almost set in thy head." Probably the sense is 'closed'; cf. King John, v. 7. 51, "O cousin, thou art come to set mine eye" (spoken by the King just before he dies). But set might indicate the fixed, vacant stare of an intoxicated person.

206, 207. The 1st Folio has "and a passy measures panyn." The 2nd and other Folios have "after a passy measures Pavin." The reading in our text is made up from both versions.

Some editors take "panyn" as a misprint for "panym" = 'a heathen,' the old form of pagan, and regard "passy measures" as Sir Toby's tipsy blunder for "passing measure." The general sense they interpret, 'He is a rogue and an egregious, extreme heathen.' This seems to me very far-fetched.

The reading in our text may be explained thus. There was an Italian dance called the passamezzo; it was a kind of pavan or pavin, also a dance. Like many foreign dances, the passamezzo was introduced into England, became popular in Elizabeth's reign, and is not infrequently mentioned in Elizabethan musical books. It was sometimes known as the 'passing measures pavan'; and other corrupt, quasi-English forms of its Italian name, very similar to Sir Toby's passy measures, were in current use. See pavin in G.

Now the point of Sir Toby's remark must be sought for in the character of the music to which a passamezzo pavan was danced. Briefly, a tune of this type consisted of regular "strains," which in their turn usually contained eight bars each. In fact, "set at eight" would be a fair description of a tune for this pavan, and the description of the Surgeon's eyes started the idea in Sir Toby's thoughts. (Furness.)

212. ass-head...coxcomb; these reproaches seem to be addressed to Sir Andrew, of whom Sir Toby, in his intoxicated state, no longer conceals his real opinion. But he may refer to Sebastian.

Enter Sebastian. He does not see Viola till line 231.

217. of my blood, i.e. my own brother.

218. wit and safety; "a wise regard for safety" (Rolfe).

219. a strange regard. He mistakes her look of astonishment at the resemblance between him and Viola for a look of estrangement or reserve because he struck Sir Toby. Cf. strange in II. 5. 184. We may remember that the natural likeness between brother and sister was increased by the fact that she had imitated his dress (III. 4. 416—418).

224. perspective; a general term for any glass "cut in such a manner as to produce an optical deception, when looked through." Orsino meant that when he looked at Viola and Sebastian he saw, as if by an optical delusion, the same face twice over. Perspectives are often mentioned by Elizabethans and were of many kinds. Sometimes these glasses were called prospectives, e.g. in Greene's Friar Bacon (1594) VI. 110, where Roger Bacon's famous magical glass is referred to.

228. For the scansion 'Antón|io,' the o being slurred, cf. III. 3. 13, note. Fear'st; cf. Merry Wives of Windsor, IV. 4. 78, "fear not that," i.e. do not doubt it.

234, 235. that deity, that divine character or power. 'I cannot, like a god, be omnipresent—in all places at the same time.'

237. Of charity, in your kindness tell me; of='out of.' This old use of charity = 'benevolence' (Lat. caritas) survives in the phrase "Of your charity, pray." Cf. too "faith, hope, charity" (άγαπη).

- 240. Such, i.e. as you are.
- 241. So...suited, dressed as you are.
- 244. dimension, body (I. 5. 280). grossly, materially, or 'coarsely.'
- 246. the rest goes even, everything else corresponds, fits in.
- 253. record, recollection; scan probably record. lively, vivid.
- 254. act, career.
- 256. lets, hinders; see G.
- 259. jump, agree; see G.
- 261—263. See I. 2. 53—56.
- 262. where, at whose house. weeds, clothes; see G.
- 263. preserv'd; some editors alter to preferr'd = 'recommended.'
- 264. occurrence of my fortune, i.e. all my business, occupation.
- 266. mistook; on this form, instead of mistaken, see I. 5. 282, note.
- 267. bias, natural tendency; see G. Olivia's instinct as a woman drew her towards Viola, a woman.
- 271. noble...blood; Orsino knew Sebastian's father; cf. I. 2. 28.
- 272. If this be so; 'if there really are two separate people—and, so far as I can see, there is no mistake' (a parenthesis). the glass; a reference perhaps to the perspective of 224. Or the metaphor may be drawn from a weather-glass; it suits the notion of shipwreck in 273.
- 276. over-swear, swear again.
- 278. orbed continent, the sun. orbed, circular. Some interpret continent = 'receptacle,' from Lat. continere, 'to contain, hold.'
- 282. upon some action, in consequence of some lawsuit.
- 283. durance, prison.
- 285. enlarge, set at large, liberate.
- 287. distract, distracted, out of his mind; see G.
- 288. extracting, absorbing; "drawing other thoughts from my mind." The 2nd and later Folios have exacting.
- 289. clearly, completely; cf. clean = 'quite' — e.g. in Othello, I. 3. 366, "clean out of the way." his, i.e. his frenzy.
- 291. hold at the stave's end, a proverbial phrase = 'to keep, ward off.' Here stave = staff; cf. staves, the plural of staff.
- 295. it skills not much, it matters not; skills, see G.
- 299. delivers, i.e. utters the words of; quibbling on 'sets free.'
- 300. By the Lord, madam; probably the Clown shouts these words; then when Olivia, in surprise, reproves him, he says, 'you must not mind a loud voice (vox) — it is appropriate to a madman's letter.'

307. perpend, consider; an affected word which Shakespeare puts in the mouth only of Clowns and characters like the bombastic Pistol.

313. cousin=uncle; see G.

318. my duty, i.e. his respect to his mistress; he has been so wronged that he ventures to speak plainly to her.

324. thought on, having been considered; an absolute construction.

327. at my proper cost, at my expense. proper, own.

328, 329. apt, ready. quits you, releases you from service.

330. mettle, character, natural disposition.

334. Viola will be Olivia's "sister" doubly—through Sebastian, Olivia's husband, and through Orsino who henceforth regards Olivia as his "sweet sister" (393).

335. Is this the madman?; said in surprise. Orsino does not think that Malvolio looks mad.

337. notorious; cf. IV. 2. 94.

339. you must not, it is no use for you to.

340. from it, i.e. differently. Cf. II. 5. 102, "her very phrases."

341. your seal; cf. II. 5. 103, "her Lucrece."

344. clear lights, distinct marks.

347. the lighter people, my inferiors. light, 'of no importance.'

350, 351. i.e. "visited" officially as a lunatic. geck, dupe; see G.

354. character, hand-writing; Gk. χαρακτίρης, 'an engraved mark.'

356, 357. she first told me; see III. 4. 8—14. cam'st; understand thou from "thou wast mad."

358. such which, such as. presuppos'd upon, previously suggested to.

360. practice, trick. most shrewdly, in a very cruel way.

369. upon; literally 'following upon,' hence 'in consequence of.'

370, 371. conceived against; they had experienced (or 'seemed to find') in Malvolio certain faults which set them against him. To screen Maria from the annoyance of Olivia, who had hinted at punishment (361—363), Fabian puts the blame on Sir Toby.

importance, importunity; cf. King John, II. 7, "at our importance is he come," i.e. at our urgent request. So important='importunate,' Much Ado, II. 1. 74 ("if the prince be too important, tell him").

372. he hath married her; see IV. 2. 75, note.

374. pluck on, excite.

375. the injuries. No doubt, Malvolio used his authority in the house oppressively; Fabian had special cause of resentment (II. 5. 9, 10). And Maria, we may be sure, had always been jealous of Malvolio's influence with Olivia.

377. poor fool!; often in Shakespeare a term of pity. Olivia is sorry for Malvolio and would not say anything discourteous to him. baffled, treated ignominiously ; see G.

378—385. Here the Clown takes his full revenge, reminding Malvolio of the 3 scenes in which he had cut the most ridiculous figure, viz. II. 5, III. 4 and IV. 2. The sentence "By the Lord, fool," is not a quotation but a summary, as it were, of Malvolio's remarks in the "dark room." In "Madam, why laugh you?" Malvolio hears his own words turned against himself; see I. 5. 89—94.

380. thrown; the Clown's slip for thrust; he quotes from memory. interlude, play, i.e. their sport against Malvolio ; see G.

385. the whirligig, the revolving course; a whirligig is "any toy or trivial object to which a rapid whirling motion is imparted," especially a top. Here the metaphor is rather that of a wheel going round; cf. the notion of "Fortune's wheel," where the wheel symbolises the vicissitudes (Lat. vicissim, 'by turn') of life. See II. 4. 117, note.

391. golden, auspicious. convents, suits, is convenient.

396, 397. habits, dress (Lat. habitus) ; cf. 'riding-habit.' fancy, love.

Excunt all, except Clown. Describing the ordinary performance of an Elizabethan drama, Dowden notes how at the end of the play the Clown used to "put the audience into good humour before they separated with...a farcical song accompanied by dancing and the music of his pipe or tabor." The song and dance were called the "jig"; generally a second performer took part in it.

"The jesters were, without doubt, the bright particular stars of the companies to which they belonged, the most popular of the actors, and the best remunerated" (Raleigh). The most famous of them in Shakespeare's time was Will Kemp.

Song. This, like some of the other Songs in the play, seems to be an old popular ballad, perhaps adapted by Shakespeare. The 'burden' or refrain, i.e. the two lines repeated in each stanza, occurs in a stanza of a similar ballad sung by the Fool in Lear, III. 2. 74—77.

398. When that; cf. Julius Caesar, III. 2. 96, "When that the poor have cried, Caesar hath wept." For that added to conjunctions, see I. 2. 48, note. and a tiny; this redundant and is common in ballads.

399. Hey and ho occur frequently in ballad-refrains. Cf. As You Like It, v. 3. 18, "With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino."

400. 'My foolish deeds were thought little of when I was a boy : not so when I came to manhood (402); then men's doors were shut against me (404).' toy, trifle; see G.

ADDENDA TO THE NOTES.

II. 3. 81. Peg-a-Ramsey, 'Margaret of Ramsey.' Ramsey in Huntingdonshire was formerly a town of some importance, noted for its great Abbey. Peg (whence the diminutive Peggy) is a variant of Meg (= Mag), short for Margaret.

II. 3. 124. Cakes and ale. "It was the custom on holidays and saints' days to make cakes in honour of the day. The Puritans called this superstition"; and Malvolio was "a kind of Puritan" (151).

II. 3, 161. cons state. Cf. "arguments of state" in Maria's letter (II. 5) and Malvolio's comment, "I will read politic authors," i.e. political writers. Surely, she must refer here not to his study of etiquette and deportment, but to his pompous style and "humour of state" (II. 5. 58). The satire is at the vanity which leads a "steward" to imagine himself little less than the Prime Minister of Illyria!

without book; having learnt it all by heart like an actor; for the stage-metaphor see I. 5, 186, note, and Romeo, I. 4. 6, 7.

II. 4. 115. thought, sadness, melancholy brooding; cf. the kindred meaning 'anxiety,' as in "take no thought for your life" = "be not anxious" (Revised Version), Matt. v. 25.

II. 5. 167. cross-gartered, i.e. with garters worn below the knee, crossed at the back of the leg and fastened in a bow above the knee.

III. I. 25. Words are very rascals etc., i.e. words have become very dangerous things to deal with since such restrictions ("bonds") have been put on the stage. Some interpret 'words are disgraced by being used in contracts' ("bonds") i.e. for legal and financial trickeries.

III. I. 132. a cyprus, not a bosom. Olivia quibbles on bosom = "the bosom of a dress," which would not be transparent like "cyprus." Probably this is the point in Midsummer-Night's Dream, II. 2. 104, 105.

III. 4. 258. on carpet consideration. Some think that consideration implies that Sir Andrew had purchased his knighthood. The word does not convey this idea of 'monetary consideration' elsewhere in Shakespeare.

IV. I. 14, 15. lubber...cockney. To an Elizabethan the words would be absolutely antithetic, and in this antithesis lies the verbal wit. Changes like lubberly word (= "vent") are valueless. The original text, with Johnson's interpretation ("affectation and foppery will overspread the world") holds the field. The sense turns on the history of cockney.

V. 206, 207. Dr Naylor's explanation ("The doctor's eyes were 'set at eight,' and so is a Pavan 'set at eight'") is convincing. The old one was that Sir Toby, who likes brisk dances (I. 3. 137, 138), uses the name of the "pavan," a grave stately dance, contemptuously, to imply that the Surgeon is 'a grave solemn coxcomb' and slow in coming.

GLOSSARY.

A.S.=Anglo-Saxon, i.e. English down to about the Conquest.

Middle E.=Middle English, i.e. English from about the Conquest to about 1500.

Elizabethan E.=the English of Shakespeare and his contemporaries (down to about 1650).

O. F.=Old French, i.e. till about 1600. F.=modern French.

Germ.=modern German. Gk=Greek.

Ital.=modern Italian. Lat.=Latin.

Note: In using the Glossary the student should pay very careful attention to the context in which each word occurs.

abuse; in iv. 2. 95=‘to use ill, maltreat’; in v. 22=‘to deceive,’ like F. abuser. For the latter, cf. The Tempest, v. 112, “some enchanted trifle to abuse me.”

access, I. 4. 16. Shakespeare commonly accents access. Many words now accented on the first syllable were in Elizabethan English accented on the second syllable, i.e. they retained the French accent, which (roughly speaking) was that of the original Latin words. By “accent” one means, of course, the stress laid by the voice on any syllable in pronouncing it. Thus we say process; but Milton wrote “By policy and long process of time” (Paradise Lost, II. 297); cf. French procès, Lat. processus. So Shakespeare scans aspect, commerce, edict, when it suits him.

accost, I. 3. 52; not used by Shakespeare in any other play. Both the sense and the form in which it occurs here (I. 3. 52) were uncommon. The usual spelling then was accoast (Lat. ad+costa, ‘a rib,’ whence coast).

admire, III. 4. 165; in the literal sense of Lat. admirari, ‘to wonder’; cf. Milton, Paradise Lost, II. 677, 678:

“The undaunted Fiend what this might be admired, Admired, not feared.”

So admirable=‘to be wondered at,’ Midsummer-Night’s Dream, v. 27, “strange and admirable.”

advise, IV. 2. 102; often reflexive in Elizabethan E.=‘consider,’ like F. s’avisier. Cf. I Chronicles xxii. 12, “advise thyself what word I shall bring” (Revised Version “consider”).

allow, I. 2. 59, ‘approve’; cf. 2 Henry IV, IV. 2. 54, “I like them all, and do allow them well.” So Romans vii. 15, “that which I do I allow not.” Lat. allaudare, ‘to praise.’

an. Note that—(1) an is a weakened form of and (d often drops off from the end of a word: cf. tawn=taund); (2) and=‘if’ was a regular use; (3) till about 1600 this full form and, not the shortened form an, was commonly printed. Cf. Bacon, Essays (23), “They will set an house on fire, and it were but to roast their egges”; Matthew xxiv. 48, “But and if that evil servant shall say.” The Quartos and 1st Folio (1623) of Shakespeare often have and where modern texts print an.

How and or an came to mean ‘if’ is much disputed.

attend, III. 4. 243, ‘wait for’=F. attendre. Cf. Merry Wives of Windsor, I. 1. 279, “the dinner attends you”; Hamlet, V. 2. 205, “attend him in the hall.”

ay me, v. 142, ‘alas.’ Cf. Milton, Lycidas, 56, “Ay me! I fondly dream.” From O. F. aymi, ‘alas for me!'; cf. Gk. oīou.

baffle. Originally (1) ‘to inflict public disgrace upon,’ especially upon a perfidious or cowardly knight; cf. Faerie Queene, VI. 7. 27. Hence (2) ‘to treat with contempt,’ as in II. 5. 175. Also (3) ‘to fool, gull,’ as probably in v. 377. Cf. Milton’s prose work, The Likeliest Means (1659), “men will not be gulled and baffled.”

barricado, IV. 2. 41; Spanish barricada, from barrica, ‘a barrel.’ Properly barricado=‘a rampart hastily formed out of barrels, stones etc.’; hence=any ‘barrier or obstruction.’ Also used as a verb=‘to fortify’; cf. Paradise Lost, VIII. 341, “The dismal gates...barricadoed strong.”

bawbling, v. 57, ‘insignificant, paltry’; literally ‘worth or like a bauble,’ i.e. a useless toy. Cf. Troilus and Cressida, I. 3. 35, “shallow bauble boats.” A vessel is regarded as the plaything of the waves.

bawcock, III. 4. 125. A colloquial, rather contemptuous, term of endearment=‘fine fellow, good fellow,’ much the same as chuck. Cf. Henry V., III. 2. 26, “Good bawcock, bate thy rage; use lenity, sweet chuck.” F. beau coq.

be, II. 2. 33, II. 3. 82. The root be was conjugated in the present tense, singular and plural, up till about the middle of the 17th century. The singular, indeed, was almost limited in Elizabethan E. to the phrase, “if thou beest,” common in Shakespeare; cf. Tempest, V. 134, “If thou beest Prospero.” For the plural, cf. Genesis xlii. 32, “we be twelve brethren.”

beshrew. Generally combined with me or my heart, either as a mild imprecation ‘woe to’ (cf. IV. 1. 62), or for emphasis ‘indeed’ (cf. II. 3. 85). The original notion was ‘to invoke something shrewd, i.e. bad, on a person’; cf. the old use of shrewd=‘bad,’ as in “foul shrewd news," i.e. bad news, King John, v. 5. 14. So shrewdly in v. 360 implies 'badly,' 'in a shameful way.'

bias, v. 267 'natural tendency'; cf. Lear, i. 2. 120 "bias of nature." F. biais, 'a slope, slant.' The metaphorical use of bias= 'inclination, tendency' is taken from the game of bowls (a favourite Elizabethan pastime), the bias being the leaden weight inserted in the side of the bowl to make it run in a slanting line and incline a certain way. Cf. Richard II., III. 4. 5, "my fortune runs against the bias."

ibble-babble, IV. 2. 105, 'idle talk'; Fluellen, the Welshman, mispronounces it pibble pabble in Henry V., IV. 1. 71. Cf. fiddle-faddle, tittle-tattle, pit-pat. In each case the second half of the compound (e.g. babble) is reduplicated for emphasis, the vowel a weakening to i.

bird-bolt, I. 5. 100; a short arrow, with a broad flat end, discharged from a cross-bow; used to shoot small birds with, as it would just stun the bird without spoiling the plumage or flesh.

blab, I. 2. 63, 'to reveal something which should be kept secret.' Cf. Coverdale (1535), Proverbs xvi. 29, "He y^t [that] is a blabbe of his tongue, maketh devyson amonege prynces." Now a colloquial word.

blazon, I. 5. 312. Originally (1) 'A shield used in war.' Then (2) 'a shield in heraldry,' and so 'armorial bearings, a coat of arms'—its sense here. Cf. Merry Wives, v. 5. 67, 68, "each...coat and several crest with loyal blazon." Later (3) 'a banner bearing arms'; cf. Macaulay, Armada 20, "Slow upon the labouring wind the royal blazon swells."

breast, II. 3. 20, 'voice'; cf. Ben Jonson, The Gipsies Metamorphosed (1621), "An excellent song, and a sweet songster! a fine breast!"

buttery-bar, I. 3. 74. Buttery, from O. F. boterie, 'bottles,' meant a store-room (1) for liquor, (2) for any provisions. The word is still in general use at Oxford and Cambridge Colleges. The opening—a kind of half door—at which the provisions were served out from the store-room was called the buttery-hatch, and the ledge or bar on the top of it, whereon to place things, was the buttery-bar. F. bouteille and bottle, butler (originally bottler) are cognate with buttery, which in etymology has nothing to do with butter.

canary, I. 3. 85; a favourite Elizabethan wine imported from the Canary Isles. Many wines are called after the place where they are made—e.g. port from Opporto and sherry from Xeres. See sack.

canton, I. 5. 289, 'song'; cf. Zepheria (1594), 11, "How many Cantons then sent I to thee." Only here in Shakespeare; the form is perhaps a confusion between canto and canson (also rare)= Ital. canzone, 'song, ballad'; cf. Lodge, Euphues Golden Legacie (1590), "My canzon was written in no such humor."

Cataian, or Cathalian, II. 3. 80; literally 'a native of Cathay' (China); also a term of reproach—'thief, rogue,' from the thieving propensity of the Chinese attributed to them in many old books of travels (Nares). Cf. Merry Wives, II. 1. 148, "I will not believe such a Cataian." Then Cathay was the ordinary name of China, being a corruption of Kitai, the name by which China is still known in Russia and Asia.

catch, II. 3. 18, 60; a short musical composition for three or more voices unaccompanied, "which sing the same melody, the second singer beginning the first line as the first goes on to the second line, and so with each successive singer"; called a catch because each singer has to catch or take up his part in time. The peculiarity of many catches is that the words and lines are so arranged as to produce comical effects. This was the case with the catch sung by Sir Andrew and the others. The modern term for such pieces, essentially English, is a "round."

caterwauling, II. 3. 76. Cater is from cat, the er being a connecting sound between the parts of the compound; waul is an imitative word.

Such words illustrate the principle of onomatopœia, i.e. the formation of a word which in its sound imitates or suggests the thing or action signified. Thus the word peewit is an imitation of the bird's cry. Many words are formed in this way; cf. lullaby, peevish, daw (III. 4. 38).

champaign, II. 5. 173, or champain, 'flat open country.' Cf. Lear, I. 1. 65, "With shadowy forests and with champaigns rich'd." F. campagne, Ital. campagna, from Lat. campus, 'a plain.'

cheveril, III. 1. 13, 'kid leather'; O. F. chevrel (modern F. cheveau), 'a kid.' Such soft leather naturally symbolises something flexible, easily stretched or turned. Cf. Henry VIII., II. 3. 32, 33, "your soft cheveril conscience...if you might please to stretch it."

clear-stories, IV. 2. 41. The clear- (commonly spelt clere-) story windows of churches are those small upper windows above the arches of the nave (i.e. above the triforium, if there is one). Though chiefly used of churches, clere-story was also applied to similar windows in large halls such as the college-halls at Oxford and Cambridge. Here the application of so grand a word to Malvolio's "dark room" is intentional humour. From clear, 'lighted' + story, 'floor of a building.'

cloistress, I. 1. 28, 'nun,' i.e. one who lives in a cloister=Late Lat. claustrum or clostrum= 'a monastery,' from claudere, 'to shut.'

cockney, IV. 1. 15. Its meanings may be traced thus: (1) 'a spoilt child, favourite, minion'—the commonest sense from about 1400 to about 1600; cf. Nash, Pierce Penilesse, 18, "A young heyre [i.e. heir], or cockney, that is his mothers darling." Hence (2) 'an effeminate,

'affected person'—as here (IV. i. 15); especially an affected, squeamish woman—as in Lear, II. 4. 123. Then (3) 'a native of a town,' towns-men being often effeminate compared with country folk. Hence (4) 'a native of London' as being the town of England. Its etymology has nothing to do with the fabulous 'land of Cocaigne.'

comfortable, I. 5. 239, 'comforting, full of comfort'; cf. Richard II., II. 2. 76, "speak comfortable words." Cf. also Isaiah xl. 2, "Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem."

competitor, IV. 2. 12, 'associate, partner'; cf. Antony and Cleopatra, II. 7. 76, "These three world-sharers, these competitors." Now competitor='rival.' Lat. cum, 'with' + petere, 'to seek.'

coranto, I. 3. 137, 'a quick, lively dance'; cf. Henry V., III. 5. 33, "swift corantos." From Ital. coranta; cf. the French form courante, 'a running dance,' from courir, Lat. currere. It seems to have been introduced from France into Italy, and thence into England.

county, I. 5. 320, 'count'; cf. Romeo, III. 5. 219, "I think it best you married with the county," i.e. Count Paris. The y (count-y) represents the e of O. F. conte, modern F. comte (Lat. comes); cf. another Elizabethan form countee. Cf. Scott's "County Guy" (Quentin Durward).

cousin; used by Shakespeare of any degree of kinship (except the first, as father, son); e.g.= 'niece' (I. 3. 5); = 'uncle' (I. 5. 131, v. 313). Sometimes in Shakespeare cousin is merely a friendly title "given by princes to other princes and distinguished noblemen."

coxcomb, v. 179, 193; properly (1) 'a fool's cap,' so called because like a cock's comb in shape and colour; then (2) a jocular term for the head. Cf. Henry V., v. 1. 57, "the skin [of the leek] is good for your broken coxcomb" (Fluellen has just struck Pistol on the head).

coystril, I. 3. 43, 'a mean paltry fellow'; from F. coustillier, 'a groom,' literally 'one who carries a dagger.' F. coustille= 'dagger,' from Lat. cultellus, 'a little knife' (culter). The coustillier bore his master's weapons (like a golf-caddy) and attended him in battle.

cozier, II. 3. 97, 'cobbler'; F. couseur, 'one who sews,' from coudre, 'to sew' (cf. the present participle cousant).

crowner, I. 5. 142, a colloquial form of coroner; cf. Hamlet, v. 1. 24, "crowner's quest [inquest] law" (spoken by one of the grave-diggers). Literally 'a crown-officer,' Lat. coronator.

curst, III. 2. 46= cursed, the p. p. of curse; through colloquial use curst lost something of its original force and in Shakespeare commonly means 'shrewish' (especially used so of women), 'sharp-tongued,' 'ill-tempered.' In The Taming of the Shrew the heroine is called "Katharine the curst" (I. 2. 128), "Kate the curst" (II. 187).

cypress, or cyprus, III. I. 132, a kind of crape or gauze material, usually black; cf. The Winter's Tale, IV. 4. 221, "Cypress black as e'er was crow," and Milton, Il Penseroso, 35, "sable stole of cypress lawn." Probably so called from the island of Cyprus (whence various fabrics were introduced into England through the Crusades); cf. cambric from Cambray in Flanders, calico from Calicut, and see fustian, p. 154. The peculiarity of cypress, which gives point to Olivia's remark, is its transparency.

damask, II. 4. 115, 'red, rosy.' The Syrian city of Damascus was famous for its red roses, and a favourite species called the "Damask rose" was (and is) much cultivated in England. Cf. Bacon, Natural History, "Damaske-Roses...have not been known in England above an hundred years, and now [1627] are so common." In Shakespeare damask implies either red or red and white mixed. Here 'red' seems likelier; cf. Coriolanus, II. 1. 232, "the war of white and damask in their...cheeks" (an allusion perhaps to the Wars of the Roses).

discourse, IV. 3. 12, 'reasoning'; cf. "discourse of reason" = 'power of reasoning' in Troilus and Cressida, II. 2. 116, and Hamlet, I. 2. 150. Then a common use of the word. Milton (Paradise Lost, V. 488, 489) makes the archangel Raphael say to Adam that there are two kinds of Reason, "discursive, or intuitive," and that men have the lower kind, viz. discourse, and Angels the higher, viz. intuition.

distract, v. 287, i.e. distracted = 'mad'; Lat. distractus, the past participle of distrahere.

A noticeable point in Elizabethan English is the tendency to make the past participles of verbs of Latin origin conform with the Latin forms. This is the case especially with verbs of which the Latin originals belong to the 1st and 3rd conjugations. Thus Shakespeare and Milton have many participles like 'create' (creatus), 'consecrate' (consecratus), 'incorporate,' 'dedicate,' where the termination -ate, in modern English -ated, = Lat. -atus, the passive participial termination of the 1st conjugation; cf. reverberate, I. 5. 291.

So with the Latin 3rd conjugation; Latinised participles such as 'deject' (dejectus), 'distract,' 'attent' (attentus), 'suspect,' 'addict' (addictus), 'pollute' (pollutus), with many others, are to be found in Shakespeare or Milton. Further, participles not from the Latin are abbreviated by analogy; e.g. Milton (Paradise Lost, I. 193) has 'uplift' = 'uplifted,' though lift is of Scandinavian origin.

ducat, I. 3. 22, a coin formerly worth in England about 6s. 8d. O. F. ducat from Italian ducato, so called because the ducat was first coined in the duchy (Lat. ducatus) of Apulia and bore the words "sit tibi, Christe, datus, quem tu regis, iste ducatus."

duello, III. 4. 337, 'the prescribed rules of duelling'; cf. Love's Labour's Lost, I. 2. 185, "the duello he regards not." In Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels, I. 1 a character returned from Italy (see p. 146) speaks of himself as the "first that ever enrich'd his country with the true laws of the duello." A famous Italian book (by Vincentio Saviolo) dealing with the whole etiquette of duelling had been translated into English in 1595, and is referred to in As You Like It, v. 4. 94. Ital. duello, literally 'a combat between two' (Lat. duo).

element. It was an old belief (to which Sir Toby alludes, II. 3. 10) that all existing things consist of four elements or constituent parts, viz. fire, water, earth and air; and that in the human body these elements appear as four 'humours'—fire=choler, water=phlegm, earth=melancholy, air=blood. Cf. Henry V., III. 7. 22, 23, "he is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him." Then the word came to be specially used of one element, viz. the air and sky; cf. I. 1. 26, and Julius Cæsar, I. 3. 128, "the complexion of the element," i.e. the appearance of the sky. By metaphor element signified 'natural sphere, proper habitation,' as in 'out of one's element'; cf. III. 1. 65, III. 4. 137.

extent, IV. 1. 57; "in law, a writ of execution, whereby goods are seized for the king. It is therefore taken here for violence in general" (Johnson). Cf. As You Like It, III. 1. 17, "Make an extent upon his house and lands." The metaphorical use of a legal term is quite in Shakespeare's style. Schmidt takes extent=‘behaviour, conduct’; but it is doubtful whether the word ever bore that meaning.

fadge, II. 2. 34, 'to turn out well, succeed'; cf. Love's Labour's Lost, V. 1. 154, "We will have, if this fadge not, an antique," i.e. if this fails. So in Lyly's Mother Bombie (1594), I. 1, "I'll have thy advice, and if it fadge, thou shalt eat."

fall, I. 1. 4, 'cadence'; cf. Pope, St Cecilia's Day,

"Till, by degrees, remote and small,

The strains decay,

And melt away,

In a dying, dying fall."

Note the same metaphor in cadence (Lat. cadere, 'to fall').

favour, II. 4. 24, III. 4. 363, 'face, countenance.' Cf. Richard II.,

IV. 168, "I well remember the favours of these men." So well-favoured (I. 5. 169)= 'of good looks, handsome'; cf. Genesis xxix. 17, "Rachel was beautiful and well favoured." First favour meant (1) 'kindness,' then (2) 'expression of kindness in the face,' then (3) the face itself.

fraught, v. 64, 'cargo'; cf. Titus Andronicus, I. 71, "as the bark, that hath discharged her fraught." So fraughtage= 'cargo,' Comedy of Errors, IV. 1. 87. Akin perhaps to freight.

fustian, II. 5. 119. Properly 'coarse cotton stuff,' so called from Arabic fusṭān, a name of Cairo in Egypt whence the stuff was first imported into England (see p. 152). By metaphor fustian means 'something high sounding and nonsensical'; Pistol was "a fustian rascal," 2 Henry IV., II. 4. 203. Cf. bombast, literally= 'cotton-wadding to stuff out garments,' then metaphorically 'puffed up, affected language.'

galliard, I. 3. 127, 'a lively dance,' of Spanish origin; cf. Henry V., I. 2. 252, "a nimble galliard." Often mentioned together with coranto (see p. 151); cf. Selden's Table-Talk, 1654, "At a solemn dancing, first you had the grave measures [i.e. slow dances], then the corantoes, and the galliards," Reynolds' ed. p. 93. Spanish gallarda.

geck, v. 351, 'dupe,' i.e. one who has been made a fool of. Cf. Cymbeline, v. 4. 67, 68, "the geck and scorn O' the other's villany." A word of Dutch origin; cf. Germ. geck, 'a fool, fop.'

gin, II. 5. 92, 'a snare, trap'; cf. Isaiah viii. 14, "he shall be...for a gin and for a snare." Short for engin (Lat. ingenium) used in Middle E.= 'a contrivance, device,' i.e. something ingeniously made.

goodman, IV. 2. 141; properly 'master of the house,' paterfamilias—cf. Matthew xx. 11, "they murmured against the goodman of the house"; just as goodwife (whence goody)= 'mistress of the house.' But goodman and goodwife were used in addressing people of humble rank, such as the grave-digger in Hamlet, v. 1. 14, and a maid-servant in Merry Wives of Windsor, II. 2. 36.

grain, I. 5. 255. O. F. graine= Low Lat. granum which, like the classical Lat. coccum, was used of the scarlet dye made from the cochineal insect found on the scarlet oak. Cf. North's Plutarch (1579), "this sail...was red, dyed in grain, and of the colour of scarlet" (Life of Theseus). Grain was a strong, lasting dye—in fact, a 'fast' colour, i.e. one that would not fade or wash out. Cf. Comedy of Errors, III. 2. 107—109, "That's a fault that water will mend"... "No, sir, 'tis in grain; Noah's flood could not do it," i.e. wash it off. Similarly the "red" (line 256) of Olivia's complexion was lasting. (Grain= 'fibre of wood, texture' is the same word; but the reference here is to the rosy hue, not to the texture, of Olivia's cheek. Cf. Milton, Comus, 750, “cheeks of sorry grain,” i.e. hue, colour.)

grize, III. I. 135, ‘step’; cf. Othello, I. 3. 200, “as a grize or step.” Middle E. grees, later grece, ‘a flight of steps.’ Cf. Wyclif, Exodus xx. 26, “thou schalt not stye [ascend] by grees to myn auter” = “Neither shalt thou go up by steps unto mine altar” (Authorised Version). O. F. gre, Lat. gradus; cf. ‘de-gree.’

haggard, III. I. 71, ‘a wild, untrained hawk’; cf. The Taming of the Shrew, IV. I. 196, “Another way I have to man [i.e. tame] my haggard.” F. hagard, ‘wild’; especially a wild falcon.

his. The idiom seen in “‘gainst the *count his galley*s” was common; cf. Troilus and Cressida, IV. 5. 177, “by Mars his gauntlet, thanks!” It arose from the old notion that the ‘s which marks the possessive case was a contraction of his—as though “the count his” were the true form, and “the count’s” a shortened form. Shakespeare commonly uses this wrong kind of genitive with proper names ending in s, such as Mars; no doubt, to avoid the awkward sound Mars' or Mars's. (For a good note on the point see A. S. West’s English Grammar, p. 97, Pitt Press Series.)

hob, nob, or hab, nab, III. 4. 262; “compounded of hab and nab, to have or not to have. Hab is from A. S. hæbban, to have; nab is from A. S. næbban, put for ne hæbban, not to have” (Skeat). Elizabethan writers apply the phrase to reckless, headlong deeds which “make or mar”; cf. the explanation of it in Cotgrave (1611), “hit or miss.”

hull, I. 5. 217; properly ‘to drift to and fro on the water, like the hull of a ship without sails or rudder’; hence ‘to float.’ Cf. Gervase Markham’s Sir Richard Grenville, “Then casts he anchor hulling on the main.” Milton speaks of the Ark “hulling” on the Flood, Paradise Lost, XI. 840.

interlude, v. 380, ‘sport, comedy’; properly ‘a play performed in the intervals of a festivity’—from Lat. inter, ‘between’ + ludere, ‘to play.’ The “most lamentable comedy” of Pyramus and Thisbe in Midsummer-Night’s Dream is called an interlude (I. 2. 6, v. 156).

jet, II. 5. 36, ‘to strut, stalk pompously’; cf. Cymbeline, III. 3. 5, “gates...that giants may jet through.” O. F. jetter, ‘to throw,’ from Lat. actare; the notion in jet is ‘to fling oneself about in walking.’ Cf. swagger, literally = ‘to sway from side to side.’

jump, v. 259, ‘agree, tally’; cf. The Taming of the Shrew, I. I. 195, “Both our inventions meet and jump in one.” So “jump with” = ‘agree with’; cf. I Henry IV., I. 2. 78, “it jumps with my humour.”

Hence the adverb jump=‘exactly, just’; cf. Othello, II. 3. 392, “And bring him jump when he may Cassio find.”

kickshaws, I. 3. 122, ‘trifle’; from F. quelque chose, ‘something.’ Commonly applied to cookery =‘delicacy,’ ‘fanciful dish’; cf. 2 Henry IV., V. 1. 29, “a joint of mutton, and any pretty kickshaws.”

leasing, I. 5. 105, ‘falsehood’; cf. Psalm v. 6, “Thou shalt destroy them that speak leasing.” A. S. ledsung, ‘falsehood,’ from leads, ‘false,’ akin to loose; the notion in leasing is ‘looseness of statement.’

let, v. 256, ‘hinder’; A. S. lettan, ‘to hinder,’ literally ‘to make late.’ Cf. Romans i. 13, “oftentimes I purposed to come unto you, but was let hitherto,” i.e. prevented.

lullaby, v. 48; an imitative word (see p. 150), formed from lu lu hummed by nurses in composing children to sleep.

madonna, ‘my lady, madam’; the Fool’s way of addressing Olivia; used only in this play. Ital. ma, ‘my’ + donna, ‘lady’ (Lat. domina).

malignancy, II. I. 4. Used here, as malignant often is by Elizabethans, with reference to astrology. Cf. 1 Henry VI., IV. 5. 6, “O malignant and ill-boding stars.” Lat. malignus, ‘unkind, ill-disposed.’ Astrology has stamped its mark on the language in such words as ‘disaster’ (Lat. astrum, ‘a star’), ‘ill-starred,’ ‘jovial,’ ‘saturnine.’

marry; corrupted from the name of the ‘Virgin Mary'; cf. “by'r lady”=‘by our Lady,’ i.e. the Virgin. Such expressions dated from the pre-Reformation times in England. The common meanings of marry are ‘indeed, to be sure’ and ‘why’ (as an expletive implying some contempt). Sometimes joined with amen to affirm a wish or imprecation; cf. IV. 2. 109, and Henry VIII., III. 2. 54, “Surrey: The Lord forbid! Norfolk: Marry, amen!”

masque, or mask, I. 3. 121, ‘an entertainment in which the performers wore masks or vizards.’ From Arabic maskharat, ‘a buffoon, jester, a pleasantry.’ When Twelfth Night was written and up to about 1640 masques were very popular in England. They were a kind of private theatricals (with music) patronised by the Court and great nobles and Legal Societies (see p. viii.). There is a masque in The Tempest. A famous one is Milton’s Comus.

minion, v. 128, ‘favourite, darling’; F. mignon. Often contumacious; cf. 3 Henry VI., II. 2. 84, “Go, rate thy minions, proud insulting boy!”

mispriſion, I. 5. 61, ‘mistake, error’; cf. Much Ado, IV. 1. 187, “There is some strange misprision in the princes.” O. F. mesprision,

'error,' from mesprendre (modern méprendre), 'to take amiss.' Misprision = 'contempt' is a separate word (from F. priser, 'to prize').

motley, I. 5. 63; properly (1) the fool's dress; sometimes (2) the fool himself, as in Sonnet 110, "made myself a motley." Also (3) used as adjective; cf. Henry VIII., Prologue 16, "a motley coat."

nayword, II. 3. 146, 'byword.' Used = 'watchword' in The Merry Wives of Windsor, II. 2. 131 and v. 2. 5. Said to belong to Warwickshire and the adjacent counties, like most of Shakespeare's dialect words; see Shakespeare's England (1916), II. 571—573.

needs, III. 2. 3, 'of necessity.' The genitive case of need and a survival of the old adverbial use of the genitive; cf. willes, 'willingly.'

nonpareil, I. 5. 273, 'a person unequalled, peerless'; cf. Macbeth, III. 4. 17, 19, "Thou art the best...Thou art the nonpareil." F. non, 'not' + pareil, 'equal'; cf. Lat. par, 'equal.'

numbers, II. 5. 111, 'metre'; more frequently = 'verse, poetry' (Lat. numeri). Cf. Pope, "I lisp'd in numbers, for the numbers came." So numerous = 'melodious' (Lat. numerous); cf. Paradise Lost, v. 150, "in prose or numerous verse."

nuncio, I. 4. 28, 'messenger'; an Italian form from Lat. nuncius. Cf. Henry More (1640), "Lucifer laughs, bright Nuncio of the Day." Commonly nuncio = an ambassador or diplomatic envoy of the Pope.

orchard, III. 2. 8 = 'garden.' This was the original sense, orchard being = wort-yard, 'herb-garden': wort = 'herb, plant.' Cf. Marlowe's Hero and Leander, II. 288, "Leander now...Enter'd the orchard of th' Hesperides," i.e. the 'garden.' Garden and yard are cognate.

othergates, v. 198; properly a genitive = 'of or in another gate,' i.e. 'way, manner,' the old sense of gate. Cf. Middle English another-gates, 'in another way, manner,' thusgates, 'in this way.'

owe, II. 4. 106, 108; properly 'to have, possess,' and so 'to bear towards, feel for.' Cf. Venus and Adonis, 523, "if any love you owe me." For owe in its original sense 'to possess' cf. Macbeth, I. 4. 10, "To throw away the dearest thing he owed." Akin to own.

pavin, v. 207; more often pavan, from F. pavane. A grave, dignified dance, of either Spanish or Italian origin; often mentioned by Elizabethans. Probably pavan = Low Lat. pavanus, 'like a peacock' (pavo), the dancers moving in a slow, stately manner (Skeat).

The particular kind of pavan alluded to in v. 207 was an Italian dance called the passamezzo, older form passemesso, "an abbreviation of passo e mezzo, i.e. a step and a half, which may have formed a distinctive feature of the dance" (Grove's Dict. of Music). The Italian name naturally got corrupted in English, and some forms found in Elizabethan works, e.g. "Passa Measures Pavin," "Passmezures Pavan," differ little from Sir Toby's "passy measures." No doubt, mezzo was corrupted (by 'popular etymology') into measures through the use of measure = 'a stately dance'—cf. the phrase 'to tread a measure.' For detailed accounts of the dances mentioned in this play see Shakespeare's England (1916), "Dancing."

peevish, I. 5. 319; 'childish,' 'silly,' 'perverse,' 'wayward.' Originally 'making a plaintive cry,' like the peewit.

point-devise, or point-device, II. 5. 176, 'exactly, precisely.' An adjective = 'too precise, needlessly exact,' in As You Like It, III. 2. 401, "you are rather point-devise in your accoutrements"; and Love's Labour's Lost, V. 1. 21. Short for the old phrase at point device = 'with great exactitude,' from O. F. à point devis = literally 'according to a point devised,' i.e. very precisely.

prank, II. 4. 89, 'to deck, adorn'; cf. Winter's Tale, IV. 4. 10, "most goddess-like pranked up"; Milton, Comus, 759, "false rules pranked in reason's garb." Akin to prance and Germ. prunk, 'pomp.'

prevent, III. 1. 94, 'anticipate, forestall'; cf. Psalm cxix. 148, "Mine eyes prevent the night watches," and I Thessalonians iv. 15, "we which are alive...shall not prevent them which are asleep," i.e. 'rise before.' Lat. prevenire, 'to come before.'

quirk, III. 4. 268, 'humour'; cf. All's Well That Ends Well, III. 2. 51, "I have felt so many quirks of joy and grief." But commonly quirk implies something not felt but said—'a jest,' especially 'a stupid joke.' Cf. Much Ado, II. 3. 245, "odd quirks and remnants of wit."

renegado, III. 2. 74, 'an apostate, deserter'; = Spanish renegado, 'one who has denied the faith' (from Lat. negare, 'to deny'). Cf. Hakluyt's Voyages (1599), "a Spaniard renegado from the host." Runagate in Psalm lxviii. 6 (Prayer-Book) is a corruption of the word—"letteth the runagates continue in scarceness."

revels, I. 3. 121; the special term for the Twelfth Night and similar festivities of the Legal Societies; cf. the definition of it in Minsheu's Dictionary (1617): "Sports of dauncing, masking, comedies, tragedies, and such like, used in the King's house, the houses of Court" (i.e. Inns of Court or Legal Societies). Twelfth Night itself formed part of the Middle Temple revels in Feb. 1602; see Introduction, p. viii.

rule, II. 3. 132; commonly interpreted 'behaviour'; but rule was somewhat confused with revel from the similarity of their forms in Middle E., and there are passages in Elizabethan writers where rule seems to have the sense 'revel.' Perhaps rule=‘revel’ here, and “night-rule”=‘night-revel,’ in Midsummer-Night’s Dream, III. 2. 5.

sack, II. 3. 206; formerly also written seck; a general name for the light dry wines imported from Spain and the Canary Isles, e.g. ‘Sherris-sack’ (as sherry was often called) and ‘Canary-sack.’ From Spanish seco, ‘dry’; cf. the French vin sec.

sad, III. 4. 5, 21, ‘grave, serious,’ without any notion of sorrow; a common use then. Cf. Henry V., IV. 1. 318, “the sad and solemn priests”; and Milton, Paradise Lost, VI. 541, “in his face I see sad resolution.” The original sense was ‘sated,’ A.S. sæd being akin to Lat. satis, ‘enough.’

save, III. 1. 172, ‘except’; save followed by the nominative case was a common idiom from Chaucer’s time to Milton’s. Cf. I Kings iii. 18, “there was no stranger with us in the house, save we two.” So in Paradise Lost, II. 814, “Save he who reigns above, none can resist.” In these instances save is a conjunction of participial origin, not a preposition, and probably came from an absolute construction. Thus “save I” may be short for ‘I being saved’=‘excepted.’

saw, III. 4. 413, ‘a maxim, proverb’; A.S. sagu, ‘a saying.’ Cf. 2 Henry VI., I. 3. 61, “holy saws of sacred writ”; and As You Like It, II. 7. 156, “full of wise saws” (said of a judge).

shent, IV. 2. 112, ‘rebuked, scolded’; cf. Coriolanus, V. 2. 104, “Do you hear how we are shent?” Shakespeare uses only the p. p. of shend which Spenser has often, especially=‘to disgrace, shame’; cf. The Faerie Queene, IV. 1. 51.

skills, v. 295, ‘matters, makes a difference’; cf. 2 Henry VI., III. 1. 281, “It skills not greatly who impugns our doom.” From an Icelandic root=‘to cleave, separate,’ whence the metaphor ‘to distinguish,’ i.e. make a difference between things.

sonnet, III. 4. 25; now limited to a particular kind of poem of fourteen lines, but applied by Elizabethans to any kind of short poem or song, especially to love-poems. The poem to which Malvolio refers as a “sonnet” was really a ballad.

sooth, II. 4. 47, ‘truth’; cf. forsooth, soothsayer. Used adverbially (II. 1. 11, II. 4. 91), sooth=‘in sooth.’ Adverbial phrases, from constant colloquial use, have a tendency to abbreviate.

Sophy, II. 5. 198, III. 4. 307, ‘the Shah of Persia’; cf. Merchant of Venice, II. 1. 25, “That slew the Sophy and a Persian prince.” So in Ben Jonson’s Volpone (1605), III. 5, “the Persian Sophy’s wife.” The word Sophy is a corruption of Arabic safī, ‘elect,’ ‘chosen’; and safī was a title (like the 'Cæsar' of the Roman emperors) borne by each Shah or sovereign of the dynasty founded by Ismael which ruled Persia 1505—1725. The derivation of Sophy from sūfi, 'wise,' is wrong.

stuck, III. 4. 303, 'thrust in fencing'=Ital. stoccata; cf. Hamlet, IV. 7. 162, "your venomed stuck." Also called stock, stoccado and stoccata. Cf. Florio (1598), "a thrust or stoccado," and Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, I. 5, "you shall kill him...the first stoccata."

taffeta, II. 4. 77, 'fine, smooth silk stuff'; a favourite material of the Elizabethans. F. taffetas from Persian tāftah, 'twisted, woven.'

tall, I. 3. 20, 'stout, valiant'; a colloquial use and generally ironical, as when Falstaff called Pistol and Nym "good soldiers and tall fellows," Merry Wives of Windsor, II. 2. 11.

testril, II. 3. 34, 'a sixpence'; first coined in the reign of Henry VIII., and then worth about a shilling. Also written tester, whence tizzie. Cf. 2 Henry IV., III. 2. 296, "there's a tester for thee." The tester was called after the French coin testoon, so named from the head (O. F. teste, F. tête) stamped upon it of Louis XII.

tilly-vally, II. 3. 83; an exclamation expressing contempt of something just said. Cf. Roper's Life of Sir Thomas More, "To whom shee, ...not likeing such talke, answeread, 'Tille valle, Tille valle'" (Pitt Press Utopia, p. xlvi). Cf. too, Scott, The Antiquary, vi: "I shall be disappointed, sir, if I do not find the ladies very undeserving of your satire"..."Tilley-valley, Mr Lovel, Tilley-valley, I say—a truce with your politeness."

toy, III. 3. 44, V. 400, 'a trifle.' Cf. 2 Henry IV., II. 4. 183, "Shall we fall foul for toys?" i.e. quarrel about trifles. Akin to Germ. zeug, 'stuff, trash'; e.g. in spielzeug, 'playthings.'

tuck, III. 4. 244, 'rapier'; a corruption through F. estoc of Ital. stocco, 'a short sword.'

unhatched, III. 4. 257; commonly taken = unhacked, i.e. not cut or dinted by blows given and received in battle. Hatch=F. hacher, which Cotgrave explains "to hacke, slice." "Cross-hatching" is an engraver's term.

viol-de-gamboys, I. 3. 27, a corruption of Ital. viola da gamba, 'the bass viol'; so called because held between the legs of the player (Ital. gamba='leg,' F. jambe). The viol, of which there were four kinds, was the forerunner of the violin and in use up to the last century. The violin (invented in Italy about 1650) gradually, on account of its louder tone, displaced the Treble, Tenor and Bass viols, only the Double Bass or violone surviving. In Shakespeare's time the viol was a favourite instrument. The Italian name viola da gamba was partly Anglicised then as viol de gambo; cf. the title of Doulard's "First Booke of Songes or Ayres...sung to the Lute, Orpherian or Viol de gambo" (1597). Hence Sir Toby's pronunciation was not far removed from the current form.

weed, v. 262, 280, 'dress'; A. S. wæd, 'garment.' Cf. Coriolanus, II. 3. 161, "With a proud heart he wore his humble weeds." Now limited to the phrase 'widow's weeds,' except in poetry; cf. Tennyson, "In words like weeds I'll wrap me o'er" (In Memoriam, v.).

welkin, II. 3. 59, 'sky'; properly a plural word='clouds,' from A. S. wolcnu, the plural of wolcen, 'a cloud'; cf. the cognate Germ. wolke, 'a cloud.'

wreck, v. 82; in the 1st Folio always spelt wrack, the usual form till late in the 17th century, cf. the rhyme in Macbeth, v. 5. 51:

"Blow, wind! come, wrack!

At least we'll die with harness on our back."

In "rack and ruin" we should write wrack. A. S. wrecan, 'to drive,' the wrack or wreck=what is driven ashore.

westward-ho, III. 1. 145; "to the west: an old cry of London watermen on the Thames in hailing passengers bound westward" (i.e. up the river). The opposite cry, of course, was "eastward-ho!", =down the Thaines to places like Deptford, Greenwich, etc.

yare, III. 4. 244, 'sharp, nimble, ready'; cf. Measure for Measure, iv. 2. 61, "if you have occasion to use me, you shall find me yare." Often an adverb; cf. The Tempest, I. 1. 7, "yare, yare! Take in the topsail." A. S. gearu, 'ready'; g frequently softens into y.

yeoman, II. 5. 45, 'servant,' its meaning in Chaucer; cf. The Prologue to the Canterbury Tales, 101, "A yeman hadde he, and servaunts na-mo." So in 2 Henry IV, II. 1. 4, yeoman means 'attendant' (viz. upon a sheriff or bailiff). Its usual sense in Elizabethan writers, as now, is 'farmer, small freeholder,' the first part of the word probably signifying 'village' or 'country, district.' "Yeoman's service" (Hamlet, v. 2. 36) was "good, loyal service such as a yeoman or freeholder performed for his feudal lord."

zanies, I. 5. 96. The zany was a stock-character of Italian comedies, being a subordinate buffoon who had to imitate clumsily the tricks and humours of the chief clown; cf. Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, II. 1, "The other gallant is his zany...sweats [i.e. labours] to imitate him in everything." Zany=Ital. zanni, a corruption of Giovanni, 'John,' Gk. Iωάννης; cf. the slang term 'a Johnny.'

ADDENDA TO GLOSSARY.

affectioned, II. 3. 160, 'affected,' literally 'full of affection' (= affection) ; cf. the Quarto's reading (1604) in Hamlet, II. 2. 464, "no matter in the phrase that might indict the author of affection," where the Folio (1623) substitutes affectionation. The same discrepancy between the 1st Folio and the 2nd (1632) occurs in Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2. 407. The inference is that this use of affection had become rather old-fashioned.

complexion, II. 4. 27 ; 5. 30 ; then a word of wider scope, often equivalent to 'external appearance in general.' Originally complexion was an old physiological term for 'the combination of the four "humours" of the body in a certain proportion'; hence 'the nature, temperament' arising from this combination, as in Hamlet, I. 4. 27, The Merchant of Venice, III. 1. 32. Lat. complexio used in Late Lat. = 'bodily constitution, habit,' from complectere, 'to embrace, combine.'

fancy...fantastical, I. 1. 14, 15. Here etymology has a literary value. Fancy is short for fantasy, Gk φαντασία, 'a making visible,' hence 'imagination.' So fancy= 'love' connotes love on its imaginative side ; it means rather that the imagination has been captivated than that the heart has been won—as with Orsino.

grize, III. 1. 135 ; a rare obsolete form of grecce, 'a flight of stairs or steps, a staircase'; from gree, 'a step.' The variant forms of this old word grecce were very numerous—e.g. greece, greese, grise. It was quite common in older English, but here and in Othello, I. 3. 237 Shakespeare practically explains it. It has been remarked as a good illustration of "popular etymology" (i.e. incorrect notions as to the origin and meaning of words) that Grecian in the name of a flight of steps at Lincoln, popularly called "the Grecian stairs," is a corruption of some plural form of this old word grecce. The original name would be simply 'the greesen' (or grisen)= 'the steps'; then, as the word fell out of use, people would insert 'steps,' and soon 'the greesen steps' would be corrupted.

proper, II. 2. 30, III. 1. 144, 'handsome, fine, comely'; a common Elizabethan use. Portia describes her English suitor as "a proper man's picture," i.e. the very picture of a handsome man. In Hebrews xi. 23, "Moses...was hid three months of his parents, because they saw he was a proper child," the Revised Version substitutes 'goodly.'

APPENDIX.

SHAKESPEARE AND PURITANISM.

Twelfth Night is commonly thought to contain some indication of Shakespeare's feelings towards Puritanism. The word "Puritan" occurs three times in the play (II. 3. 152, 155, 159). It is applied to Malvolio—as "sometimes a kind¹ of Puritan."

To attempt to infer Shakespeare's own opinions from his plays is hazardous. What a dramatist makes his characters say may not be at all what he himself, speaking in his own person, would say. But we may fairly suppose that had Shakespeare been in sympathy with Puritanism the term "Puritan" would not have been used of a character who is covered with ridicule as Malvolio is; and we must remember that it occurs elsewhere, e.g. in All's Well That Ends Well, I. 3. 56, 98, in a contemptuous context. It is safe, I think, to credit Shakespeare with some dislike of Puritanism and to regard the passages in Twelfth Night and All's Well as casual expressions of that dislike. The causes of his feeling are not far to seek.

In the first place, there was a bitter, long-standing feud between the play-writers (and play-goers) and the Puritans. Puritanism had opposed the theatre in every way and tried hard to suppress it altogether. The dramatists naturally retorted by heaping ridicule upon their enemy. "Gibes, taunts, caricatures in ridicule and aspersion of Puritans and Puritanism make up a great part of the comic literature of the later Elizabethan drama¹."

As an actor therefore and play-writer Shakespeare might be expected to cherish and express a feeling of hostility to the Puritans.

¹ Part of the taunt therefore is that Malvolio is not a consistent, honest Puritan.

Again, Puritanism, with all its sterling qualities, had a certain narrowness and intolerance altogether alien to the broad and tolerant impartiality of Shakespeare. He identified himself with no party or sect. He represented the full enlightenment of his age, and more. What most distinguishes him when he deals with religious matters is his absolute freedom from bias. "He was no fanatic and no infidel, no atheist and no mystic, no Brownist and no politician." He preserved always a "wonderful medium between narrow-mindedness and extreme¹," and dealt fairly with all forms of religious conviction. To a man of such tolerance the intolerance of the Puritan spirit cannot have been congenial.

But while recognising that Shakespeare's personal dislike of the Puritans finds vent, to a certain extent, in Twelfth Night, I do not think that we are justified in regarding his delineation of the character of Malvolio as a "grand attack upon them." Hunter, who adopts this view in his well-known paper on the subject, says: "there is a systematic design of holding them [the Puritans] up to ridicule, and of exposing to public odium what appeared to him to be the dark features in the Puritan character....Shakespeare intended to make Malvolio an abstract of that character, to exhibit in him all the worst features....His object was to hold up the Puritan to aversion....In Malvolio's general character the intention was to make the Puritan odious."

Surely this overstates the case—reads into the play something more than is really there. Sustained and bitter satire would be out of place in a piece so light and bright as Twelfth Night. Its tone is good humour. Malvolio is made ridiculous but scarcely "odious." One does not think of "dark features" in his character. There is, I hope, pity as well as "aversion" in our laughter at him: Olivia at any rate is sorry for him. We must not take Malvolio's faults too seriously or too harshly.

If Shakespeare had deliberately set to work to satirise Puritanism and make it appear contemptible he would have painted the picture in deeper colours. But I do not believe that he had any such design, or that these allusions in the play are anything but passing strokes of sarcasm which just indicate—and no more—his attitude of unfriendliness towards the Puritan movement. On the general relation of the Puritans towards the stage see some remarks in Kenilworth, xvii. (Pitt Press ed. p. 250), a novel full of Shakespearian allusions and words which add greatly to the Elizabethan colouring. See also Shakespeare's England,

HINTS ON SHAKESPEARE'S ENGLISH.

THE following elementary hints are intended to remind young students of some simple but important facts which they are apt to forget when asked to explain points of grammar and idiom in Shakespeare's English.

To begin with, avoid using the word "mistake" in connection with Shakespearian English. Do not speak of "Shakespeare's mistakes." In most cases the "mistake" will be yours, not his. Remember that things in his English which appear to us irregular may for the most part be explained by one of two principles:—

- (1) The difference between Elizabethan and modern English;
- (2) The difference between spoken and written English.

(1) As to the former: what is considered bad English now may have been considered good English in Shakespeare's time. Language must change in the space of 300 years. Elizabethan English, recollect, contains an element of Old English, i.e. inflected English that had case-endings for the nouns, terminations for the verbs, and the like. By the end of the 16th century most of these inflections had died out, but some survived, and the influence of the earlier inflected stage still affected the language. Often when we enquire into the history of some Elizabethan idiom which seems to us curious we find that it is a relic of an old usage. Let us take an example.

There are numerous cases in Shakespeare where a verb in the present tense has the inflection -s, though the subject is plural; cf. the following lines in Richard II., II. 3. 4, 5:

"These high wild hills and rough uneven ways Draws out our miles, and makes them wearisome."

The verbs draws and makes appear to be singular; but probably each is plural, in agreement with its plural antecedents hills and ways; s=es being the plural inflection of the present tense used in the Northern dialect of old English. In the Southern dialect the inflection was eth; in the Midland en. When Shakespeare was born all three forms were getting obsolete; but all three are found in his works, *eth*¹ and *en*² very rarely, es or s many times. His use of the last is a good illustration (a) of the difference³ between Shakespearian and modern English, (b) of one of the main causes of that difference—viz. the influence of a still earlier inflected English.

(2) A dramatist makes his characters speak, and tells his story through their mouths: he is not like a historian who writes the story in his own words. The English of a play which is meant to be spoken must not be judged by the same standard as the English of a History which is meant to be read. For consider how much more correct and regular in style a book usually is than a speech or a conversation. In speaking we begin a sentence one way and we may finish it in another, some fresh idea striking us or some interruption occurring. Speech is liable to constant changes, swift turns of thought; it leaves things out, supplying the omission, very likely, with a gesture; it often combines two forms of expression. But a writer can correct and polish his composition until all irregularities are removed. Spoken English therefore is less regular⁴ than written English; and it is to this very irregularity that Shakespeare's plays owe something of their lifelike reality. If Shakespeare made his characters speak with the correctness of a copybook we should regard them as mere puppets, not as living beings.

Here is a passage taken from Henry V. (IV. 3. 34—36); suppose that comment on its "grammatical peculiarities" is required:

¹ Cf. hath and doth used as plurals.

² Cf. wax-en in Midsummer-Night's Dream, II. i. 56: see G. to that play.

³ Another aspect of it is the free Elizabethan use of participial and adjectival terminations. Cf. "estimable," II. i. 28; "incredulous," III. 4. 88; "deceivable," IV. 3. 21.

⁴ Note the irregular sequence of tenses in Shakespeare; cf. III. 2. 65.

"Rather proclaim it...

That he which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart."

Two things strike us at once—"he which" and "That he...let him depart." "He which" is now bad English; then it was quite regular English. The student should say that the usage was correct in Elizabethan English, and give some illustration of it. The Prayer-Book will supply him with a very familiar one.

"That he...let him depart." A prose-writer would have finished with the regular sequence "may depart." But Henry V. is supposed to say the words; and at the moment he is deeply stirred. Emotion leads him to pass suddenly from indirect to direct speech. The conclusion, though less regular, is far more vivid. This brief passage therefore exemplifies the difference (a) between Elizabethan English and our own, (b) between spoken English and written. It is useful always to consider whether the one principle or the other can be applied.

Three general features of Elizabethan English should be observed:—

- (1) its brevity,
- (2) its emphasis,
- (3) its tendency to interchange parts of speech.

(1) Brevity: Shakespeare often uses terse elliptical turns of expression. The following couplet is from Troilus and Cressida (I. 3. 287, 288):

"And may that soldier a mere recreant prove That means not, hath not, or is not in love!"

Put fully, the second line would run, "That means not to be, hath not been, or is not in love." Cf. again Richard II., v. 5. 26, 27:

"Who sitting in the stocks refuge their shame,
That many have and others must sit there";

i.e. 'console themselves with the thought that many have sat there.' This compactness of diction is very characteristic of Shakespeare. For note that the omission of the italicised words, while it shortens the form of expression, does not obscure the sense, since the words are easily supplied from the context. That is commonly the case with Shakespeare's ellipses or omissions: they combine brevity with clearness. See I. I. 34, II. 4. 99, III. 3. 40, v. 37, 89; and for omission of the relative pronoun, a frequent and important ellipse, cf. I. 5. 108, 123, II. 4. 89, 110 (with the Notes).

(2) Emphasis: common examples of this are the double negative (II. 1. 1, IV. 1. 6), and the double comparative or superlative; cf. The Tempest, I. 2. 19, 20, "I am more better than Prospero," and Julius Caesar, III. 1. 121, "With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome."

(3) Parts of speech interchanged: "almost any part of speech can be used as any other part of speech" (Abbott). Cf. I. 5. 141, II. 3. 145, III. 2. 48, III. 3. 24, III. 4. 82, 100, 222, 253, IV. 2. 99, V. 1. 86, and see the Notes on these passages.

Two or three other points in Twelfth Night may be classified under "grammar" and noted here.

I. 2. 35 : What's she? What sort of person? A common phrase in Shakespeare. It is not that what is put for who, but that the speaker enquires as to the rank or condition of the person. A natural first question to ask in times "when the distinction between ranks was much more marked than now"—Abbott.

V. 1. 123 : But hear me this; literally 'for me' (the indirect object); but this so-called "ethic" dative often has an emphasising force = 'mark you,' 'just,' 'please to.' So here it is like some gesture of emphasis. See III. 2. 35 (note). In I. 2. 53, "conceal me what I am," some take me as an ethic dative (= 'for me, in my interest'); perhaps, rightly.

V. 1. 135. most jocund, apt and willingly. The adverbial suffix must go with apt, and probably qualifies jocund also. Shakespeare often makes one termination serve for a pair of words in close relation, and sometimes extends the license to three words. Cf. The Comedy of Errors, v. 88, "When he demean'd himself rough, rude and wildly"; Sonnet 80, "The humble as the proudest sail"; Cymbeline, IV. 2. 347, "I fast and prayed for their intelligence, thus."

INDEX OF WORDS, PHRASES AND NAMES.

This list applies to the Notes only; words of which longer explanations are given will be found in the Glossary. The references are to the pages.

Abbreviations :—

adj.=adjective. adv.=adverb, n.=noun. vb=verb.

- | | |
|-------------------------------------|------------------------|
| abstract used for concrete 103, 139 | blank (n.) 113, 121 |
| action 133 | "born under Taurus" 96 |
| affect 115 | botch up 133 |
| affectioned 110 | botcher 99 |
| allow of 135 | bottom 139 |
| an=one 105 | bout 130 |
| anatomy 123 | brabble 139 |
| antique 111 | branched 116 |
| aqua-vitæ 118 | breach 105 |
| arbitrement 130 | brine 91 |
| argument 122 | brock 116 |
| Arion 92 | Brownist 123 |
| aspéct 97 | bum-baily 128 |
| back-trick 95 | burnt sack 111 |
| balked 123 | but=than 97 |
| barful 98 | by'r lady 109 |
| battery 133 | by your leave 121 |
| bear-baiting 114 | "cakes and ale" 110 |
| beauteous-evil 131 | "call me cut" 111 |
| before me! 111 | can (n.) 107 |
| behaviour 92 | Candy 139 |
| belike 125 | carpet-knight 129 |
| Bennet 139 | case 141 |
| bespeak fair 141 | "Castiliano vulgo" 94 |
| bestow of 126 | chantry 137 |
| betimes 106 | character 144 |
| betrothal 137 | charity 143 |
| Biddy 127 | check 117, 120 |

- cherry-pit 127
 churchman 119 civil bounds 97 clause 122 clear-story 134 clearly 143
 clodpole 128 close! 114
 cockatrice 128
 codling 100 collier 127 commerce 128
 compare (n.) 113
 compass (vb) 92 complexion 112 comptible 101
 con 101, 110 conclusions 138 conduct 129 confine (pun on) 93 constant 135 constellation 98 construction 111, 121
 construe 120 convent (vb) 145
 "corrupter of words" 119 credit 137
 cross-gartered 117
 cubiculo 123
 "cucullus non facit monachum" 99
 cunning (adj.) 102
 curtain before pictures 96 cypress 112 dagger of lath 136
 dally nicely 119
 deceivable 137 degree 122
 denay 114 deserts 131
 determinate 104
 "diluculo surgere" 106 dimension 103, 143
 distemper (vb) 104
 distraction 139
 "dog at" 108
 double-dealing 138 driving 92
 dry 95, 99
 dubbed 129
 durance 143
 Eastward-ho! 122 eater of beef 95
 "Egyptian thief" 140
 Elephant (inn-name) 125 endeavour thyself 136 entertainment 102
 espousal 137
 estimable wonder 105
 event 132
 "except before excepted" 93 expressure 110 extracting 143
 extravagancy 104 fall besides 135
 fancy 90, 112
 "Farewell, dear heart" 109
 father (=priest) 137
 "fear no colours" 98 feature 131 feed post 103 fell 90 field 110 finder 128
 firago 130 fire-new 123 five wits 135
 flame-coloured 96 fleshed 133
 folly-fallen 120
 fond (vb) 106
 "for all waters" 135
 forty 107
 fourteen years' purchase 133 fruitless 133
 gaskins 98 golden 145
 gracious 103
 gray eyes 102
 Greek (=jester) 133
 grizzle 141 gross 124
 gull (vb) 110 gust 93 habits 145
 "hale souls" 108

hart...heart (pun) 90, 134 having 131 heart 101, 107
 "hermit of Prague" 134
 hey ho 145
 "Hey Robin" 135 honesty 109 humour 97
 if that 93
 impeticos 107 importance 144
 "in standing water" 100
 incardinate 141
 incredulous 127 instance 137 intent 112
 interchangement 141
 into=unto 139
 "it's all one" 100 jade (vb) 118 jealousy 124
 jewel 128
 King Gorboduc 134 know of 130
 "lady of the Strachy" 115 lapsed 125
 lay on 128
 Legion 127
 leman 107 lenten 98 lie (vb) 119
 lief 123 lime (vb) 126 list 121 liver 91, 122, 123
 Lucrece seal 116 mad (vb) 100
 malapert 133
 manakin 123
 maugre 122
 May morning 128
 Mercury 100
 "metal of India" 114
 mettle 144
 "Midsummer madness" 126

miscarry 126
 Mistress Mall 96 modest 134
 mute 93
 "my mouse" 99
 Myrmidons 107 natural 93
 "new map" 124
 none (=nothing) of 95
 nor...not(double negative) 104, 132 notoriously 135
 "O, the twelfth day" 109
 Od's 141
 o'er-flourished 131 of=by 105 of charity 142 old 95 olive 102
 open (adj.) 133
 opposite (n.) 123, 129
 "orbed continent" 143
 "out of his guard" 99
 over-swear 143
 Pandarus 119 parish-top 94
 pass (fencing-term) 130
 "pass his word" 99
 passion III
 "passy measures" 141, 142
 "Patience on a monument" 113 peace! 134
 pedant 124
 Peg-a-Ramsey 109
 Penthesilea III
 perdy 135
 perfections 91 perpend 144 perspective 142
 pia mater 100
 pilchard 119 pipe 97
 pity of 114
 "Please one...please all" 126
 pluck on 144 politician 123
 "poor fool" 144, 145 possess 110

- practice 144 presently 128
 " primo, secundo, tertio" 138
 private (n.) 127 proper 122, 144 proper-false 106
 property (vb) 135, 136 propriety 140
 puritan 110
 put down 95, 99
 put quarrels on 129
 Pythagoras 135 quit 144 recollected 111 regard 116 reliques 125
 renown (vb) 125 reverberate 103
 ride you 131
 "Roman hand" 126 round 109
 rubious 97
 rudesby 133
 Saint Anne 110
 saturnine 112 save thee! 119
 savour (vb) 140
 scathful 139 schedule 102
 scruple (pun on) 127 season (vb) 91 self 91 self-love 100
 shafts of Cupid 91
 "shake your ears" 110
 she (=woman) 102
 sheep-biter 114
 sheriff's posts 100
 shrewishly 101
 shuffle off 125
 singularity 117
 sir priest 130
 Sir Topas 134
 skilless 124
 skipping 101
 'Slid 132
 'Slight 115 slough 117 small 98
 sneak up! 109
 sorry but 119
 sot 100
 Sowter 117
 "speak madman" 100
 sphere-music 121 spinster 112 squash (n.) 100 staniel 117 start (vb) 134 steward's chain 110
 stone-bow 115 store 125 stout 118 strange 118 strangeness 132 suited 143
 swabber 101
 swarths 110
 sweet-and-twenty 108
 sweeting 108
 syllogism 99
 tabor 119 taffeta 112
 tang 117
 Tartar (=Tartarus) 118 taste (vb) 121, 129 taxation 102
 tender (vb) 140
 "the less" 92
 "the pregnant enemy" 106
 "the tongues" 95
 "the while" 122
 "the windy side" 128
 "There dwelt a man" 109
 thou (vb) 123
 "Thou knave" 109
 though that 93
 "thought is free" 94
 "Three merry men" 109
 Tiger (ship's name) 139 time-pleaser 110
 tinkers 109 trade 121 trappings 138 tray-trip 118
 triplex 139

- unchary (adv.) 128
“under the star” 96 understand (pun on) 121 undertaker 131
ungird 132
unprizable 139 use (n.) 119

validity 90
vent 132
very (adj.) 93
Vice (in “Morality” plays) 136

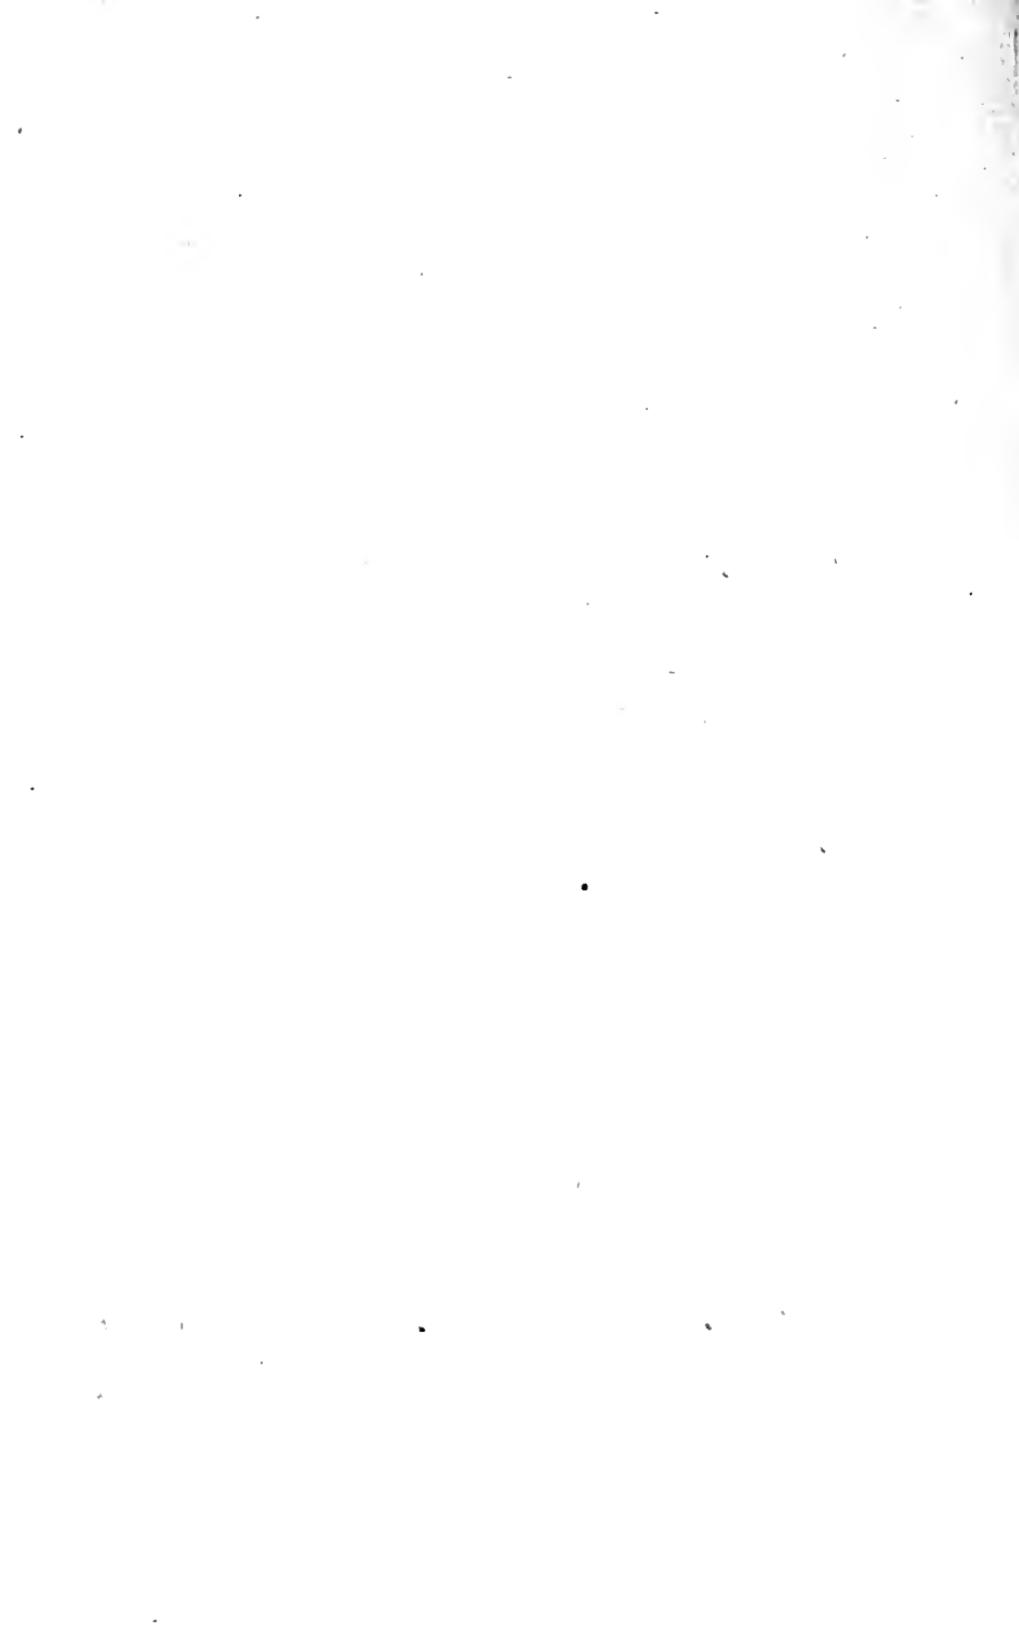

wain-ropes 123
Ware (great bed of) 123
“We three” 107

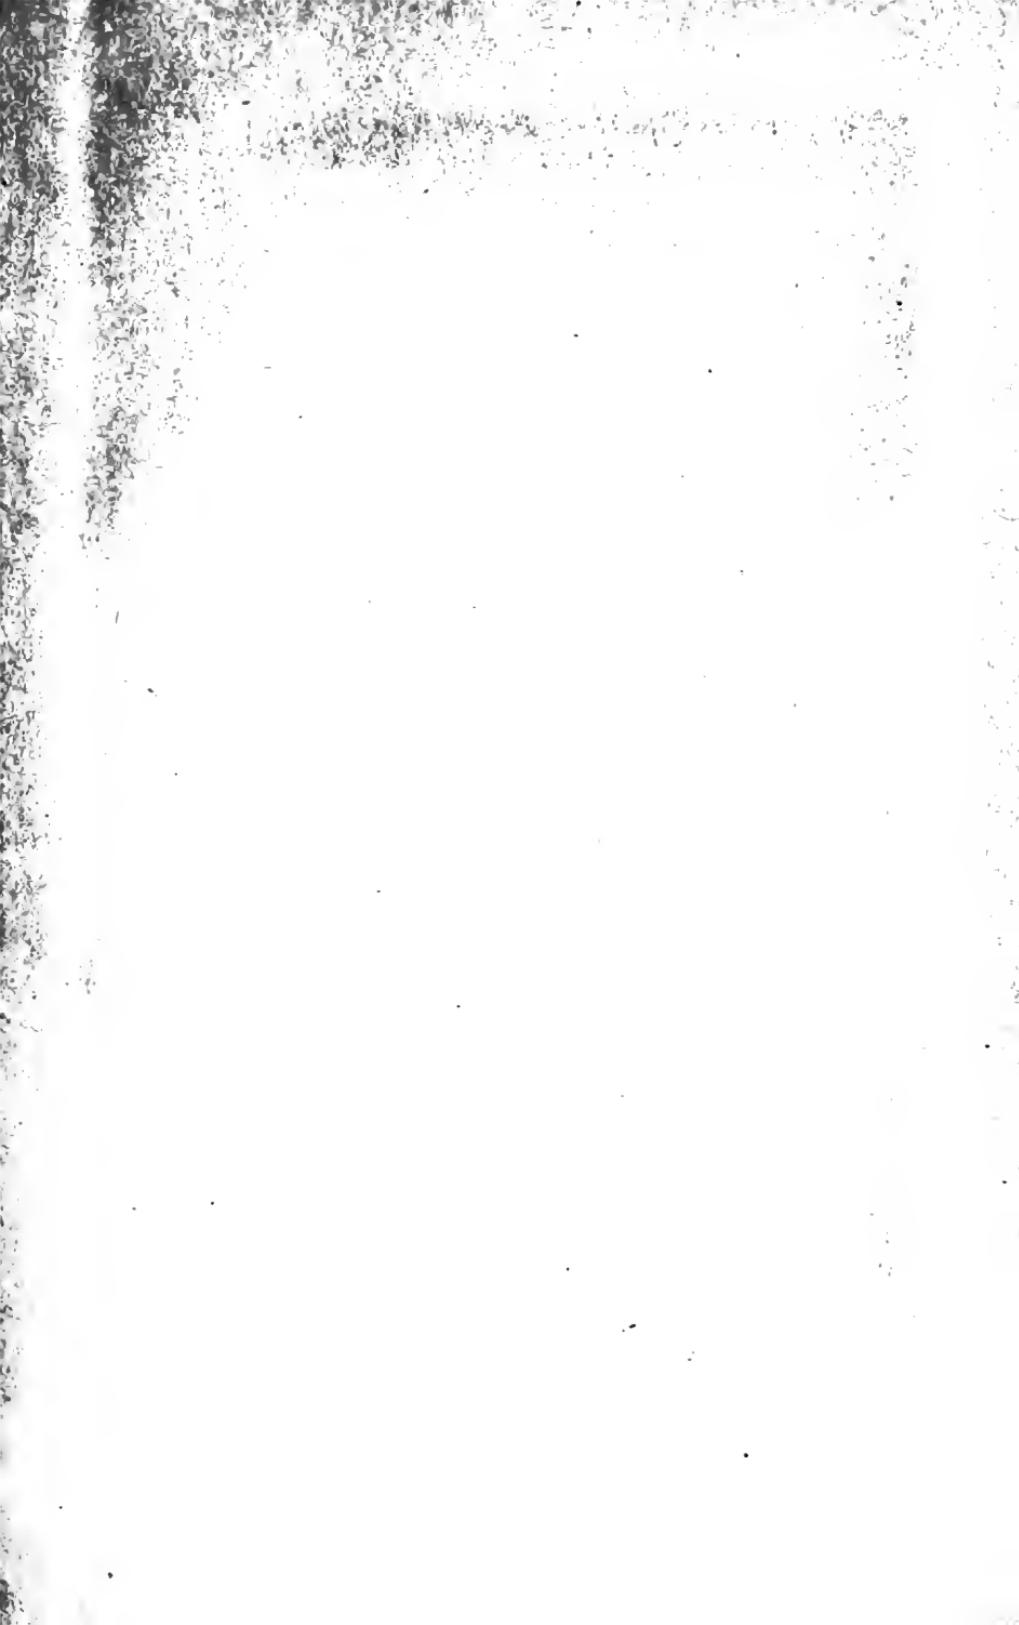

Westward-ho! 122
“what time” 137
when that 145
whiles 137
whip-stock 107
“whirligig of time” 145
willow 103
“with cars” 116 withal 129
wive (vb) 145
woodcock 116, 135

yellow stockings 117
“yeoman of the wardrobe” 115
“you have said” 119
“you were best” 98, 106, 126

CAMBRIDGE : PRINTED BY
J. B. PEACE, M.A.,
AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Author Shakespeare, William LE
203888 Collections S527V

Title [Plays] ed. by A.W.Verity. [Vol.14]:— Twelfth night.

University of Toronto Library

DO NOT REMOVE THE CARD FROM THIS POCKET

Acme Library Card Pocket
Under Pat. "Ref. Index File"
Made by LIBRARY BUREAU

